FOR years advertising of The Chicago Tribune Newspapers Syndicate has urged publishers to "Buy Leadership." This is no idle slogan coined for the purpose of building sales, but the actual result of the use of sound and original features. Undoubtedly the biggest single factor in the remarkable growth of The Chicago Tribune and The News, New York's Picture Newspaper, has been the exclusive use of all of the features sold by The Chi-

The 49th State is the St. Louis Market

—radius 150 miles surrounding St. Louis

Population . . . . towns . . . . industry . . . . transportation . . . . accessibility . . . . trade outlets . . . . . all expressed in terms of Commerce . . . . determine the area of a market.

Commerce is the measure. It ignores political boundaries. City, county or state limits are not trade limits. . . . . As expressed above in the page reproduced from the News Bulletin of The J. Walter Thompson Company, advertising agents—

> ". . . . trade does not go by counties, nor yet by states; even cities are not a satisfactory basis for comparing sales with population, since in almost every case a city of considerable size is surrounded by a large population which does in the city a substantial part of its buying, either wholesale or retail, or both."

1,026,715 People in St. Louis But More Than 5,000,000 in The 49th State

1,026,715 people live in metropolitan St. Louis, yet within the natural trading area surrounding and including St. Louis there are more than 5,000,000.

Here, then, is the St. Louis market . . . . nothing less. It is more than St. Louis alone, large as it is . . . . more than a 30, 40 or 50 mile area . . . . a vast commonwealth extending out 150 miles in every direction . . . . known as The 49th State—the natural trading area of St. Louis.

. . . . A commonwealth with 372 towns of more than 1,000 population—vast and rapidly increasing industrial development—a veritable network of railroads and highways—every section quickly and economically reached.

On the other hand, by rail and by the bus load, more than 34,000 people a day pour into St. Louis. The bulk of the 40,000 and more retail dealers in this market outside of St. Louis look to St. Louis as their natural source of supply.

Through them comes a 10-billion-dollar annual demand for shoes, drugs, hardware, dry goods, groceries, furniture, automobiles . . . . everything. Add to this the 8-billion-dollar buying power of metropolitan St. Louis and you have an 18-billion-dollar market.

And the great army of 49th State retailers look to The St. Louis Globe-Democrat—to Globe-Democrat advertising—to help them sell merchandise. 92.2% of them read The Globe-Democrat; 88.2% state that it helps them to sell goods.

The Largest Daily in America's Third Largest Market

The Daily Globe-Democrat covers this market, the third largest in the United States, as no other newspaper even claims to do. . . . . It enters more homes . . . . has more circulation . . . . 3 times as much daily circulation in The 49th State outside of St. Louis as the second St. Louis paper.

Ask the nearest Globe-Democrat representative to give you the facts about The 49th State, or write us direct. Executives interested in this market should avail themselves of the assistance The Globe-Democrat offers through its Service and Promotion Department and the Research Division.

St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Reach this wealthy state market through state newspapers.

Prosperity Rises High in Florida

THERE is rich reward in Florida for the man who employs his talents industriously. Witness the fact above.

During thirty years per capita wealth increased slightly less than $200; but a new alertness to opportunity arose, and the climbing line of average wealth is inescapable in its meaning.

And Good Fortune must be lavish with the individual, to record such increase per capita. But this is only logical—Florida soil grows eighty varied crops and more crops a year on the same land than any other state; all the world buys from Florida's natural resources, every month in the year, and a "dull season" cannot exist; although primarily agricultural, Florida's factories produce more than $200,000,000 annually in manufactured goods and more than $12,000,000 worth of minerals is sent to outside markets each year.

Little wonder the line of prosperity rises so sharply—in Florida!

Know Florida better—judge by known standards her amazing progress and her prosperous destiny, remembering that the riches of the state forecast the welfare of the individual.

To Every Man the Fruit of His Labor!

Florida puts no penalty on business enterprise or personal earning power.

The law prohibits levying a state income tax.

There is no state inheritance tax in Florida.

Florida does not assess corporations for an annual franchise tax.

There is no state stamp tax on stock issues or transfers.

Private property of stockholders is protected against liability for corporate debts.

Florida is out of debt and makes no tax today for obligations of the past.

Jacksonville Building Permits for 1925, totaled $14,760,711. For the year of 1924 they totaled $7,311,-497.00.

These thirteen million dollars can be translated into terms of new manufacturing plants, great office buildings, apartments, and thousands of smaller residences.

The greatest medium for reaching this augmented buying power of Jacksonville is

EDITORIAL RESEARCH

Editorial Research Reports	828 18th st. N.W., Washington, D. C.	Cleveland & Perkins B. P. Garnett Richard Boeckel,

The recent consolidation of Daytona, Daytona Beach and Seabreeze now makes Daytona Beach the seventh city in the State of Florida.

Daytona Beach has a permanent population in excess of 25,000, and will entertain approximately 25,000 visitors during the present season.

To you, Mr. Advertiser, this means that by use of space in the Daytona Beach News, the only A.B.C. paper in the city, you will thoroughly cover at one cost this desirable market.

The Daytona Beach News had a circulation in December in excess of 5,400 daily and 6,100 Sunday, and is now enjoying the largest circulation in its history. Rate 4c per line flat. Represented nationally by Frost, Landis & Kohn.

"NOT BEN DAY"!

—BUT—

that you can put on your copy, in your Art, Advertising or Engraving Department, and see the complete effect before making plate.

No machine contract or license required.

Briefly, this Medium consists of transparent sheets with photographically opaque characters of a "Ben Day" nature on them. This detail is quickly and easily removable from any portion desired, and, where left will combine photographically with the under detail of the copy. The copy is in no way affected when the sheet is removed.

BORDERS ON THE UNCANNY

what can be done with this medium!

Every newspaper or publication, with or without "Ben Day" Departments, can use this "Shading Method" to advantage.

If you have a "Ben Day" Department, it will increase its capacity and make you less dependent on it, and its limitations.

If you haven't a "Ben Day" Department, it will make one unnecessary. If you give out your work, it will save you both time and money.

It will help you get business, and help you handle it after you get it; for besides being more economical it is faster and more flexible than any other method.

NOTE.– Regardless of the fact that we have installed our complete manufacturing plant, multiplying our former capacity, the unexpected bunching of orders for certain numbers will sometimes completely exhaust our supply of these particular patterns. Considerable time is required for the proper seasoning of stock and the finished result; therefore there may be some delays in filling orders where we do not have the cooperation of our clients and know their approximate monthly needs in advance.

PRICES: Single sheets, $1.00; 50 sheets or over, 50c. per sheet; 500 sheets or over, 35c. per sheet. Working accessories, 60c. per set. Introductory Unit No. 1 contains one sheet of each design (84 different sheets at 50c. each, and includes working accessories and character color chart free. 5% discount for cash with order.

On trial orders for fifty sheets or over, or Introductory Unit No. 1, we allow the use of any two sheets and will make complete refund upon request, if unsatisfactory. THIS ANNOUNCEMENT IS YOUR GUARANTEE.

NOTE: THIS ANNOUNCEMENT WAS REPRODUCED AS "ONE LINE PLATE," "SAME SIZE."

Zoë Beckley

ZOË BECKLEY'S CORNER is a "help column," a news feature and a sort of jolly "sermon" all in one.

It is about 500 words long and runs six-a-week.

THE CORNER is based on current events and letters from readers. Its helpful comment is forthright and practical rather than sentimental, but if a tear does creep in sometimes, along with the smiles and friendliness that characterize it, it is because Zoë Beckley sees every side of life, understands — and sympathizes.

ZOË BECKLEY'S CORNER fits equally well on Magazine or Editorial Page and draws readers of every type and both sexes. Its writer knows the working girl's side of things as well as the capitalist's, having spent years at a stenographer's desk before she became a newspaper woman and an interviewer of celebrities.

A shipnews reporter once described Zoë Beckley as "Everybody's friend—and a smile for all!"

She liked that, because she loves people and people love her. When the New York Evening Mail raised her salary to a new high mark, the business manager said: Don't thank the paper, the paper thanks you."

Which tells the story.

Helen Keller

INTO THE LIGHT is as optimistic as it sounds.

You cannot read these daily talks by Helen Keller, world famous deaf and blind philosopher, without an immediate sense of stimulation. One admirer says: "I paste them on the wall above my kitchen sink and ponder them over and over as I work!"

A woman who has overcome the appalling obstacles of lifelong deafness and blindness and made a world of light and beauty for herself cannot but help others to fight successfully discouragements and griefs. Helen Keller does. And with a poetry, sweetness and gaiety all her own.

INTO THE LIGHT is a six-a-week feature of about 500 words each day. As everyone knows, Miss Keller lives in TODAY. She reads everything, knows everything and has ideas on everything from jurisprudence to jazz and from finance to flappers.

Helen Keller is known the world around. In these articles she tells how she has accomplished her wonders—learning to speak, going through college, meeting famous people, doing interesting things, being successful and happy.

Inspiration is in every line.

Marie, Queen of Roumania

QUEEN'S COUNSEL is a unique 350-word feature (six-a-week) by Marie, Queen of Roumania, the first time any royal writer has given the newspaper public a daily glimpse into her heart and life.

QUEEN'S COUNSEL has a message for everybody. Her Majesty takes for her subjects everyday problems of everyday folks and counsels wisely and sympathetically. Out of her own full experience she gives her readers colorful bits that help and amuse. She writes simply and sincerely, and touches both current events and personalities with such freshness and frankness that her articles seem like face-to-face interviews.

The quality that endears Queen Marie to the people everywhere is her humanness. She is always the Queen-with-a-capital-Q but she is also a Woman-with-a-capital-W. And perhaps just a little more woman than queen.

QUEEN'S COUNSEL increases circulation because it helps every woman in every problem, in every walk of life.

UNIT MACHINES
Any necessary number of heads from 2 to 10

Successfully handling Black-and-White, Rotogravure, Magazine Tabloid, Pink Sheets, Comic, or other Single or Collected Sections

For newspapers issuing Sunday editions consisting of several sections, heretofore necessitating laborious collating or "stuffing" of the different sections into one assembly by hand—the Halvorsen Newspaper Stuffing Machine comes as a great emancipator, freeing newspaper publishers from the excessive costs and the exasperating worries and delays. It does the work speedily, uniformly and without error. It economizes floor space and trims a substantial slice off the payroll.

Manufactured on a basis of standardized units, from accurate jigs and templets, a machine may consist of any number of units necessary to accommodate newspapers of two or more single or collected sections. Units may be added at any future time to meet changes or increases in the number of sections printed. In the delivery, the machine may be made to kick over every twenty-fifth, twentieth, fifteenth or tenth paper, enabling the operator to take off a uniform pile.

A speed of not less than five thousand completely stuffed papers per hour for each machine is guaranteed, no matter of how many heads the machine may consist. For example, a five head machine turns out in one hour the equivalent of twenty thousand hand stuffings. Motor drive and control is the most modern and efficient type, controlled from any point on the machine. Electrical cut-outs automatically stop the machine to prevent any shortage of sections, insuring against mistakes, complaints and claims of shortage.

Complete information and prices will be submitted to interested publishers.
Accurate recommendation of a suitable equipment will be facilitated by sending copies of papers showing order of assembly, time of printing each section and time necessary to begin and complete delivery from mailing room.

What Some of the Users Say

From The Chicago Tribune:

"We have had twelve Halvorsen Newspaper Stuffing Machines in operation in our mailing room for the past two years and the installation has proved a decided success—a great saving—as we now do the same volume of work in a third the time. Five sections are now inserted in one operation of an eight-hour period where formerly it took three separate periods of eight hours each.

"The complete papers are in much better condition. Machine stuffing shows a decided saving in waste, light, space occupied, supervision and overhead. Ninety-five per cent of help used on machines is part-time help regularly employed elsewhere in miscellaneous occupations.

"Over a period of six months our records show an actual cash saving in stuffing costs of twenty per cent of the purchase price of the machines."

C. M. Burke, Mailing Superintendent

From the Memphis Commercial Appeal:

"We are pleased to say that we have used your Halvorsen Newspaper Stuffing Machines for almost a year. The machines have been quite satisfactory. We get the paper out with our own crew, thus cutting off many outsiders we had before, with quite a saving in expense."

J. W. Hays, Business Manager

From the Saint Paul Dispatch:

"In reply to your inquiry as to whether the Halvorsen Newspaper Stuffing Machines are satisfactory and have proven to be a good investment, we regard them as a very necessary part of our mailroom equipment, and believe it impossible, without considerably increasing our costs, to get out our Sunday paper in our present quarters by hand stuffing. We know these machines are all right."

D. B. Donnelly, Superintendent

From the Saint Paul Daily News:

"You will be interested to know that we are showing a constantly increasing production with our Halvorsen Newspaper Stuffing Machines.

"Our run Sunday morning for five hours showed an average in excess of 6,000 per hour on both machines. During this time our foreman reports that we had only two stops on account of papers jamming. The performance of these machines has been very satisfactory, and has fully justified your guarantee that they would fill an average of 5,000 papers per hour.

"In addition to being able to dispense with handling a large number of help each week, our records show that for the year of 1925 we reduced our stuffing expense one-half, and on this basis the machines will pay for themselves in two and a half years. We do not hesitate in saying that we are very much pleased with our purchase."

Our 96th Year Was the Best

The Boston Evening Transcript, recognized as the leading family daily in New England, improved on its 1924 record, and in 1925 carried a larger volume of display advertising than in any other of its 96 years of successful publication. There were notable gains in national advertising, particularly in financial advertising.

To advertisers who know bankers and Boston—these facts require no explanation.

LARGEST DAILY CIRCULATION IN BROOKLYN OF ANY BROOKLYN NEWSPAPER

Advertise in St. Petersburg Now!

ONE hundred per cent of the people in St. Petersburg have money, and 90 per cent of them have nothing much to do but SPEND IT!

They are building homes and furnishing them, which means that they are buying everything from cement to curtain rods. Building permits for the first ten months of 1925 amounted to $19,300,000, as compared to $2,801,120 in 1920.

Are you getting your share of the business that is flowing out of this bee-hive of activity? A MARKET is made up of PEOPLE who want what you have to offer, and have the means to pay for it. PEOPLE—TODAY—are basking in the sunshine on the friendly green benches of St. Petersburg, just a step from the store where your merchandise is sold. Most of them are reading the DAILY NEWS, a progressive newspaper which has filled their demand for journalistic support of home, city and State.

Because it gives you the most complete coverage of the Sunshine City and Pinellas County, Florida's hot-spot of buying activity, NOW, your message in the DAILY NEWS will get quick action. Your market is sitting on the benches, WAITING FOR IT.

Population—City 47,132 Trading Area 300,000

IN

GREENSBORO, N. C.

National advertisers in 1925 found it profitable to use 1,678,052 lines in the Daily News. A gain over 1924 of 254,560 lines.

Greensboro, North Carolina, is one of the three important major North Carolina markets. The trading area includes Guilford County and the rich Piedmont district, a market that is particularly receptive to a great variety of household and food products.

You cannot promote North Carolina without including Greensboro—and you will naturally select the GREENSBORO DAILY NEWS, the only paper of measured circulation.

Greensboro, N. C., population is 47,132 (U. S. census estimate July 1925). Trading area (35 mile radius) 300,000 population.

The GREENSBORO DAILY NEWS (A. B. C.) circulation exceeds 25,000 daily—32,000 Sunday—one cost for complete coverage.

IN A CITY OF 59,000 FAMILIES, WHERE THE ONE EVENING PAPER ALONE

GIVES 70% COVERAGE

ALL NATIONAL ADVERTISERS SHOULD HEED!

When a market as big as Greater Detroit can be covered thoroughly with as few media as its two evening and two of its three Sunday newspapers it seems poor economy to try to do the job with less. The population is nearly a million and a half—and is compact.

Florida's Newest and Fastest Growing Section

From the Peace River to Cape Sable—from the Gulf of Mexico to Lake Okeechobee—America's last frontier is coming into bloom.

During 1925, the population of this section doubled. New cities and towns are springing up and pioneer farmers are tilling the rich soil.

At the center is Fort Myers, the metropolis of Southwest Florida. The population of Fort Myers increased from 9,000 to 18,000 in 1925.

Here is a new but permanent community, forming new habits of living and new buying habits.

Covering completely this vast area and occupying a position of unusual strength and prestige is the FORT MYERS TROPICAL NEWS.

In Fort Myers and Lee County, the Tropical News has a larger daily average net paid circulation than all other state and local newspapers combined.

JULIUS MATHEWS Special Agency

An Oracle and A Power in an unusually Prolific Territory—

The center of one of the most important sections of the great Metropolitan District, NEWARK, NEW JERSEY, from the advertiser's standpoint, occupies a strategic position among the cities of the country.

Dominating this rich territory, its circulation covering it like a blanket, the

Newark Evening News

is recognized as its Great Home Newspaper—a newspaper enjoying the respect of reader and advertiser alike.

And not only do local advertisers look to it as their great medium, but New York Merchants and National Advertisers, too, recognizing its influence and coverage in a territory rich in potential prospects, have made it the outstanding medium to exploit their wares of merit.

The result is that, during 1925, among ALL the six day newspapers published in the United States, the NEWARK EVENING NEWS ranked

FIRST in Classified Advertising
FIRST in Automobile Advertising
FIRST in National Advertising

Conclusive evidence that you, too, may share in the rich rewards resulting from concentrating in NEW JERSEY'S HOME NEWSPAPER, the Newark Evening News.

LITERARY AND ART MARKET OF THE UNITED STATES

THE following information covering the principal literary and art markets of the United States has been compiled by Editor & Publisher for the service of writers, newspaper men and illustrators.

The data below was obtained by questionnaire to the responsible executives in charge of purchasing manuscripts for their publications. The compilation shows that there is a tremendous demand for all types of writing. Fiction, in the form of the short story, probably leads the field, but there is a large market for authoritative articles upon nearly every branch of endeavor. The market for art, while necessarily more limited, is broad enough to encourage those new in the field.

The following symbols are used (M) monthly publication; (Tri-M) tri-monthly; (Bi-M) bimonthly; (W) weekly.

Covering a Newly Discovered Field

Florida has consistently broken so many records —building and otherwise—in the last few months that the unusual progress of its newspapers is taken as a matter of course.

That the National Advertisers are taking advantage of this newly found field is being demonstrated daily by the increased number of Florida dailies being added to campaigns.

Clearwater, county seat of Peerless Pinellas County, becoming nationally known as the "Springtime City," with its more than $5,000,000 worth of building in 1925, has stepped into the front rank of Florida's progressive cities.

And Clearwater with its city and suburban population of more than 20,000 can be reached only through

The

St. Petersburg Times

Reaches a Wonderful Florida Market

Picture a balmy climate, a beautiful city and excellent opportunity for money-making in almost every line of business. Combine with this, extensive newspaper advertising that has brought money, brains and ambition and you have a cross section of St. Petersburg—a hustling city of more than 100,000 people situated on the west coast of Florida.

The money these people brought and the money they make combine to create a most unusual market for all commodities.

Quality goods sell in St. Petersburg, but there is a popular demand, also. For instance, a survey of the automobile market shows that the low-priced car sale is normal in St. Petersburg, and that the demand for quality cars is more than five times the normal.

People come to St. Petersburg in great numbers from every part of the globe, and they satisfy their desire to keep in touch with the outside world by reading the newspapers, more particularly the morning newspaper, The Times, of 43 years establishment in its field. The Times is the only morning newspaper in the city, and it only can give these people a complete newspaper with financial, sport, market and world news.

Because the St. Petersburg Times leads in every classification, it should be the choice for your advertising schedule.

DURING 1925 THE TIMES CARRIED OVER 25,159,568 LINES OF PAID ADVERTISING

Agriculture Helps West Virginia Prosperity

In addition to the vast manufacturing and mining industries of West Virginia, the state has 87,289 farms, valued at more than one-half billion dollars. Annual value of farm crops is more than $100,000,000.00. 73% of these farms are free of all debt.

West Virginia farmers are 98.5% American born and 100% English reading. Leading farm products are wheat, corn, buckwheat, potatoes, dairy products, tobacco, apples and other fruits, cattle, hogs and poultry.

More than 15,000 boys and girls belong to the Four-H Agriculture Clubs and each county employs a farm agent and a home economic expert.

"Business is good" in West Virginia. Use these leading daily and Sunday newspapers to increase your sales.

NEWSPAPER LINAGE, 23 CHIEF CITIES, 1914-1925

NEWSPAPER linage for 1925 of the 107 newspapers in 23 leading American cities presented for the past 12 years by Editor & Publisher shows approximately a 5 per cent gain over the record of 1924 and indicates that the year saw the largest volume of advertising ever carried by newspapers. The total of 1,237,360,956 agate lines tops the 1923 total, the previous record, by more than 46,000,000 lines, and surpasses the 1920 and 1924 totals, which were about equal, by more than 60,000,000 lines. October and November linage totals are by far the highest ever recorded for these or any months.

The chart on the next page traces the course of newspaper advertising in these 23 cities from January 1, 1914, to the end of 1925 and is the only comprehensive record covering the newspaper advertising business during that period.

Newspapers which are included in the 1924 tabulation are listed below:

Create a nation-wide demand in Britain for your merchandise

"THE DAILY CHRONICLE" is the second National daily in Britain. Certified daily net sale—1,026,781.

It is the ONLY newspaper printed simultaneously in LONDON, the Heart of the Empire, and LEEDS, the centre of the busy industrial North, thus ensuring a completely National distribution. It is on sale—with up-to-the-minute world news—at an early hour every morning, in town, village and hamlet throughout England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales.

The mileage of the "DAILY CHRONICLE" special newspaper trains exceeds anything ever attempted by any newspaper in the land. Aeroplanes, in addition to steamboats, are used daily for transit to Ireland, and a fleet of fast motor cars carries supplies to rural districts everywhere.

TO THE AMERICAN MANUFACTURERS SEEKING NATIONAL DISTRIBUTION FOR HIS MERCHANDISE IN BRITAIN, "THE DAILY CHRONICLE" OFFERS A COMPLETE CAMPAIGN IN ITSELF.

Whole Front Page—£600 (Early booking for 1926 essential).

Single column inch (Specified position) £4-10-0 per insertion, (non-specified position) £4 per insertion.

Complete rates and specimen copy gladly supplied on request

Tell it to the people of Britain through "JOHN BULL"

THIS great paper goes into every town, village and hamlet throughout the length and breadth of Great Britain.

It is read by all classes—by the business magnate in his Rolls-Royce and the woman who walks to save her car fare.

Its influence is second to none in the country.

John Bull's increasing sales (now well past the million mark) are genuine sales due to Editorial merit alone and not to free competitions or other "Sales-boosting" schemes. If you want to cover the whole of Britain quickly, effectively and therefore economically—put your announcements in "JOHN BULL."

Some Recent Contributors to "JOHN BULL":

Rt. Hon. Stanley Baldwin (The Premier)
Earl of Oxford and Asquith (ex-Premier)
Rt. Hon. Winston Churchill
Duchess of Athol M.P.
Sir Hall Caine C.H.

ENGLAND'S WEALTHIEST DISTRICT

PRINCIPAL YORKSHIRE NEWSPAPERS

BRADFORD dominates the Wool Trade of the World.

It is the Commercial Capital of an area which includes such populous and thriving towns as Huddersfield, Halifax, Keighley, Dewsbury, Batley, Morley, etc.—an area with a 3,000,000 population.

The wealth of Bradford's citizens may be judged from the fact that seven Building Societies operating in the city have combined assets amounting to £33,000,000, or one-quarter of all the Building Societies' capital of the United Kingdom.

The Dominant Four

has ranked amongst the leading British Provincial Dailies for nearly a century, and is acknowledged as the highest authority on Woollen, Worsted and Allied Industries. It has the confidence of all commercial classes, amongst whom its circulation is especially high, while the quality of its literary and social features, together with its "Women's" and "Sports" pages, combine to ensure a definite and desirable "home" influence of exceptional value to advertisers.

"Yorkshire Observer Budget"

Fridays, 2d.

A popular newspaper giving the week's news; and famous for more pictures than many papers which are designated "picture" papers.

The Bradford Daily Telegraph

has won a well-deserved reputation as one of the highest and most virile amongst British Provincial Evening Journals. It enjoys a wide circulation, being regularly read in almost every Bradford home. Its Advertising Columns carry the announcements of most leading British and American Advertisers, and are regarded as indispensable in any National scheme of advertising. Further details and advertising rates for both journals will be supplied on application to the Head Offices—Bradford. Leeds—Albion Place. London—172, Fleet Street, E.C. 4.

"Yorkshire Sports"

Saturday evenings, 2d.

Eagerly purchased for its unique service of information relating to local, national and international sport. Yorkshire is a great sporting County.

THE DOMINANT FOUR

must be included in any advertising scheme for Yorkshire, especially the West Riding.

THE GARLAND ADVERTISING SERVICE has been entrusted with the preparation of the Publicity and Selling Plan for the NOVOCRETE & CEMENT PRODUCTS CO. LTD., for

NOVOCRETE
SOLID WITH AIR
A NEW AND IMPROVED FORM OF CONCRETE

NOVOCRETE, of which much will be heard during the next few months, is an entirely new discovery in the concrete class that is destined to revolutionize building methods and costs. There are few constructional purposes to which NOVOCRETE cannot be applied with advantage, whether in town-planning, road making, wall and floor construction, or the hundred and one internal and external building needs of factory, office, shop, and private residences.

NOVOCRETE is more economical than any other building material in its original costs and also, because of its much lighter weight, in freight charges. You may buy it in a form which permits of the laying of floors and roads in liquid form or where that is not convenient in Pre-cast Units for Roof-Tiling, Flooring or Partition Walls.

THIS IS YET ANOTHER INSTANCE of a new advertiser with an entirely new product, who, seeking professional, trader and consumer goodwill, chooses naturally the aid of the Advertising Service Agency, which, in practical selling experience, has no equal in London or out of it.

Here are a few of the famous firms and products for which S. T. Garland acts, and it should be remembered that everything he does is given personal supervision. Ask any of these clients whether the Garland Complete Selling Organization gives a good account of everything undertaken.

BRITISH NEWSPAPER ASSOCIATIONS

THE NEWSPAPER SOCIETY, 85 Fleet Street, London, E. C. 4. The Newspaper Society, founded in 1836 as the Provincial Newspaper Society, was reconstituted in 1917 and 1921. In the latter years it became the one organization representative of the newspaper press of England and Wales (with the exception of the London daily and Sunday newspapers); the Irish Newspaper Society is affiliated to it, and it is in close touch with the Scottish Daily Newspaper Society. A number of local associations throughout England and Wales act with and strengthen the work of the central office. The Society's activities include: Issuing of a Monthly Confidential Circular to members, supplemented by special circular letters on matters of urgency; supplying of information concerning the standing of advertising agents; negotiating with Trade Unions upon matters affecting members' interests; collecting debts owing to members; scrutinizing and if necessary working for the amendment of proposed legislation affecting newspapers; arranging for joint action in cases where newspapers are threatened with legal proceedings; in brief, working for the advancement of the interests of newspaper proprietors and producers in all ways. Officers for the year 1925-26: President, Mr. Arthur L. Woodhead (Huddersfield Examiner); Immediate Past President and ex-officio Member of Council, Mr. William Astle (Stockport Advertiser); Hon. EMPIRE PRESS UNION, 71 Fleet Street, London, E. C. 4. Objects: An organization of newspaper proprietors and editors of leading newspapers and periodicals published in the United Kingdom, the British Dominions and Colonies Overseas, and in India. The Empire Press Union is the only organization linking in its membership the whole of the Press of the British Empire to whose common interests it is devoted. An important part of the Union's policy is the holding of periodic conferences of Empire newspaper proprietors and editors in the United Kingdom and the overseas Dominions. The third took place in Australia last autumn. Over fifty newspaper proprietors and editors from all parts of the British Empire attended this conference and were guests of the Australian Press and Government during an extensive tour of the Commonwealth. It is expected that the next conference will be held in London in 1930. The Union has performed important work in cheapening and quickening facilities for the distribution of inter-Imperial news by cable, wireless telegraphy, and mail, and continues to exert its influence in this direction. It has separate sections in Australia, New Zealand, India, South Africa, Canada and the West Indies. The headquarters section in London includes in its membership practically all the London correspondents of the Press of the overseas Dominions on whose behalf it has secured important official privileges and facilities. In a word, the Empire Press Union stands for unity of the British Imperial Press in all matters of common concern. Officers: President, The Rt. Hon. Viscount Burnham, C. H.; Hon. Treasurer, Major the Hon. J. J. Astor, M. P.; Chairman, Sir Robert Donald, G. B. E. LL. D.; Members of the London Council, Mr. Ewan. S. Compare this old "morgue" →

with this up-to-date reference department

What a difference! Yet the two rooms are one and the same. The top photograph was taken before the SHAW-WALKER newspaper reference department specialist went to work. The lower picture was taken after.

The old-fashioned "morgue" must go. It is inadequate. The modernized newspaper reference department must take its place.

Paper after paper throughout the country is changing over to the new, "Built Like a Skyscraper" filing systems as planned and installed by the Shaw-Walker newspaper reference department specialists.

HOW BIG MUST YOUR PLANT BE TO USE C-H PRESS CONTROL?

"The Safest System in the World"

Pressroom—Evanston News-Index—Circulation 7,000. Cutler-Hammer Automatic Press Control panel at right with several of the push button stations shown mounted on press.

Pressroom—Trenton Times—Circulation 38,856. Presses equipped with C-H Press Control and C-H Newspaper Conveyors carry the papers direct from presses to delivery room.

OCCASIONALLY a newspaper publisher in a smaller city may feel that C-H Control Equipment is only for the big circulation dailies. This is so because of the greater publicity given such installations of Cutler-Hammer Control Systems as the Philadelphia Bulletin, Philadelphia Inquirer, New York Times, Detroit News, Chicago Herald & Examiner, Milwaukee Journal, Minneapolis Tribune, Los Angeles Times, and similar big circulation dailies.

Cutler-Hammer Control Systems, however, are adaptable to any type and size of press equipment. Newspapers like the Evanston News-Index, Kokomo Tribune, Ann Arbor Times-News, Jackson Citizen-Patriot, Green Bay Gazette, Salina Journal, Trenton Times, and Sacramento Bee, have found it profitable to install Cutler-Hammer Printing Press Control, because it speeds up production and insures dependability and safety.

Ever since the first application of electric motor drive in the printing and publishing field, Cutler-Hammer has worked with publishers and press builders, developing and refining drive and control methods. For every piece of motor-driven equipment there is a C-H controller, ranging from the simplest type of starter to the most complete automatic control system.

If you want to get the most production from your presses, it will pay you to put your control problems up to Cutler-Hammer.

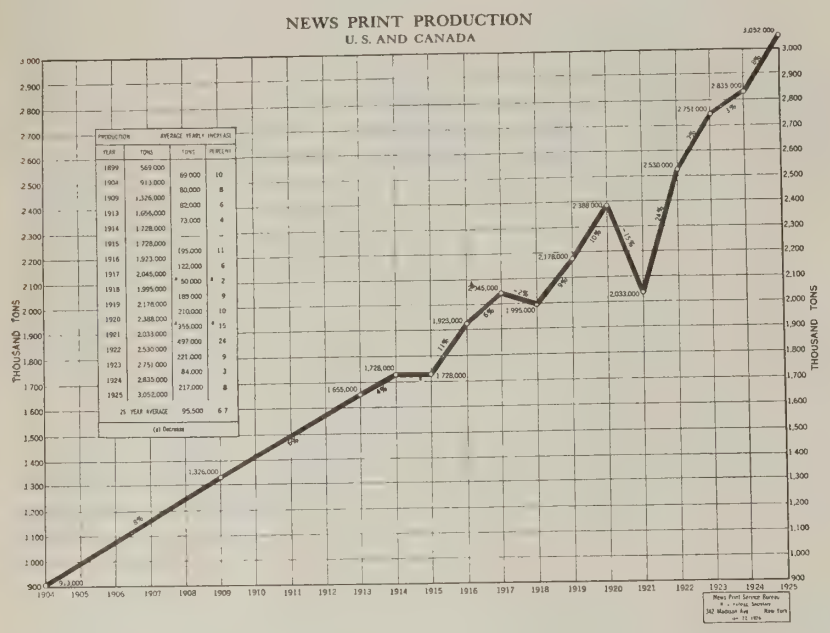
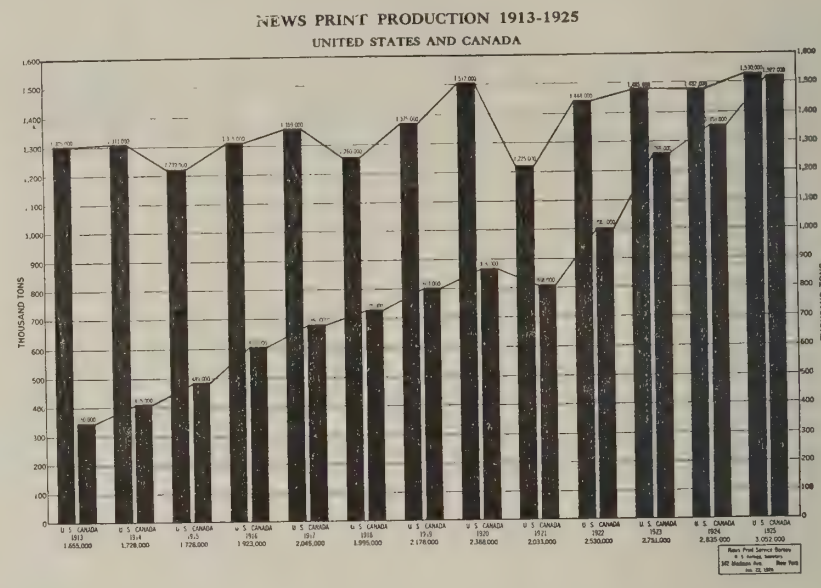
A Fact Is a Fact!

¶ And the most important fact you have to keep in mind when planning an advertising campaign for Japan is the fact that The Jiji Shimpo is invariably the first choice of foreign advertisers in Japan who are selling imported products to Japanese customers.



These foreign clients, both American and European, whose responsible representatives are resident in Japan and conversant with conditions here, are attracted to The Jiji by the universally acknowledged fact that the quality of its circulation is unmatched throughout the Japanese Empire. The reliability of its news and the courage and sanity of its editorial writers has made it the favorite journal of that great, forward-looking class of Japanese who are the first to recognize the worth of a foreign article and who possess the means of gratifying discriminating tastes.



The Jiji Shimpo will be grateful for the opportunity of doing for you what it has done for its other American and European clients, from whom it is happy to enjoy the largest patronage of any publication in the Far East.

RECORD PRODUCTION OF NEWSPRINT PAPER IN 1925

PRODUCTION in the United States during December 1925 amounted to 136,681 tons and shipments to 137,718 tons. Production in Canada amounted to 136,983 tons and shipments to 140,165 tons, making a total United States and Canadian production of 273,664 tons and shipments of 277,883 tons. There was also 13,348 tons of news print made in Newfoundland in December and 96,588 tons during the year with 986 tons made in Mexico in December and 12,681 tons during the twelve months so that the total North American production in December was 287,988 tons and during the year 1925 the Continental total was 3,161,804 tons.

Stocks of news print paper at United States mills totaled 16,238 tons at the end of December and at Canadian mills 18,414 tons, making a combined total of 34,652 tons which was equivalent to 3.2 days' average production. During December the United States mills operated at 94.4 per cent. of capacity and the Canadian mills at 99.0 per cent. The news print mills also made 1,968 tons of hanging paper in December, 594 tons of which were made in Canada.

Comparing production during the year of 1925 with the same period of each of the five previous years, the United States mills made 3 per cent. more than in 1924, and 3 per cent. more than in 1923, 6 per cent. more than in 1922; 25 per cent. more than in 1921 and 1 per cent. more than in 1920; the Canadian mills produced 12 per cent. more than in 1924, 20 per cent. more than in 1923, 41 per cent. more than in 1922, 88 per cent. more than in 1921 and 74 per cent. more than in 1920.

The combined production of the United States and Canadian mills for the year 1925 was 8 per cent. more than in 1924, 11 per cent. over 1923, 21 per cent. over 1922, 50 per cent. over 1921, and 28 per cent. over 1920.

PAWTUCKET—CENTRAL FALLS

These twin cities, although under separate municipal governments, are commercially, socially and physically one city with 100,359 population according to the latest official estimates. Employment for over 38,000 well paid industrial workers is supplied by more than 480 factories manufacturing over 160 different products.

Fundamental prosperity is reflected in the building expenditure for 1925, officially estimated at $10,000,000 — over $4,000,000 for dwellings.

Best of all this community with its trading territory—total of over 150,000 population—is completely and virtually exclusively covered through its only newspaper—

The Outstanding Achievement Of Far Eastern Journalism

The Empire of Japan is still ringing with echoes of the celebration which marked the complete success of the Asahi Shimbun's airplane flight from Tokyo to London. The project, which was appropriate not only because it symbolized closer relationships between the East and West but also because of the part the Asahi has played in furthering those relationships was attended by many obstacles. Every one of them, however, was overcome, to the everlasting credit and honor of the gallant birdmen.

Stop and think, Mr. American Advertising Man, what this means to you and your campaign to develop your market in Japan. The Asahi Shimbun, publishing the leading daily journals of both Tokyo, the capital, and Osaka, the industrial metropolis, is now more than ever a national institution. The circulation of the Osaka Asahi is over one million daily and that of the Tokyo Asahi is over a half-million every day. These legions of readers look upon their favorite newspaper not only as a good newspaper but as an organization devoted to furthering by the most intelligent means the best interests of Japan and international peace. The spirit of patriotism has sung praises of the Asahi's enterprise in every corner of the Empire.

The circulation and prestige of the two Asahi papers are at your service.

A NEW EMPIRE IS BEING OPENED

"Mexico is the new land of promise of North America, and the development of the West Coast of Mexico offers possibilities as great as that of the Mississippi Valley a century ago."—Mid-Winter Edition of the "Los Angeles Times," 1925.

The Southern Pacific Railway is now spending many millions of dollars in the Northwest of Mexico closing the last remaining gap between LOS ANGELES and MEXICO CITY, and opening up a vast empire of untold wealth.

LA FRONTERA is the Spanish paper of the Northwest of Mexico with the largest circulation covering this new empire!

Don't Miss The Editor & Publisher Annual Topical Index For 1926

As an additional service to subscribers and in response to many requests we compiled a covering all significant and vital news of the trade recorded in the 52 sparkling and newsy issues of EDITOR & PUBLISHER during the past year. This feature makes the 1926 INTERNATIONAL YEAR BOOK of even greater worth and importance to you than ever before—a fact that seemed hardly possible.

Turn to the Index Now—See For Yourself

By means of this TOPICAL INDEX each page of EDITOR & PUBLISHER as published during 1925 will automatically change from past history to a source of immediate reference. You will refresh your memory on the important events of the past year. You will find data, facts, figures and news items with ease, speed and accuracy. With the aid of your filed copies, this index works simply and quickly. Items are indexed and cross indexed; all news pertaining to advertising and journalism is recorded with the date of issue in which it appeared and the page indicated.

All copies of EDITOR & PUBLISHER should be saved during 1926. This index will be a regular feature of all future YEAR BOOK NUMBERS.

What Every Editor Wants

"Jessy Trimble's dramatic letter is the most informative of all the letters now being offered from New York. It has the feel of the theatre: it is written by one who knows the stage and not by Alice in Wonderland . . ."

O. L. Hall,
Editor Chicago Journal

"I am extremely interested in your Metropolitan features . . ."

Louis Weitzenkorn,
Sunday Feature Editor, New York World

"Your fine work . . ."

Charles H. Dennis,
Managing Editor, Chicago Daily News

Facts——————Interest!——————Thrill!!

Newspapers using Science Service have discovered that accurate science is not necessarily dry as dust. SS stories throb with interest.

Millikan, Einstein, Shapley, Mayo, Pupin, Cattell—and ten thousand others—are humanized to the average reader when he reads of their achievements in Science Service features.

New rays, medical wonders, intimate glimpses of nature, the glory of the stars, creations of chemistry—the practical pageant of scientific progress—is made available to the press through Science Service's Daily Science News Bulletin, Why the Weather, Nature's Notebook, Science Shorts, Illustrated Feature Articles, Star Map, Science Photographs, Wire and Other Services.

For reader-getting copy with a new idea, wire:

Lakeland is a Real Good Town for the Sale of a Real Good Product!

Lakeland people and Lakeland merchants are believers in Nationally advertised merchandise. They have learned that no product will stand continual use of expensive advertising space unless it is superior in quality. Lakeland's newspaper has helped show them this fact.

An idea of the progress Lakeland is making is told in its building permits for the year 1925 which amounted to $8,506,685.00. Lakeland is the metropolis of Florida's richest county; is the most important citrus shipping point in the state; has the lead in per capita wealth; is building factories, skyscrapers, stores, schools, churches, and HOMES.

THE LAKELAND LEDGER

Every afternoon and on Sunday morning is

"Lakeland's 'Big City' Newspaper"

There are 20,000 good people and one good newspaper in Lakeland—Florida's center of industry and climate.

You Can't Get Away From It!

Paterson, N. J., is an evening paper town and the most intensive coverage of the greatest purchasing power of the population in Paterson and surrounding towns is supplied by the only newspaper in the city to show any substantial advertising gains in 1925 over the previous year. This gain amounted to 620,585 lines against a loss of 145,940 sustained by the morning paper and a gain of only 91,703 lines by the other evening paper.

In department stores it showed a loss of 182,459 lines, but the other two papers showed losses of 325,194 for one and 289,741 for the other.

Remember

that in comparing lineage figures supplied by enthusiastic national representatives, you must consider this factor: Paterson, being an industrial town, its mills and factories close down at noon Saturday; therefore the evening papers carry but little local display and no department store, women's wear, food or specialty shop lineage in their Saturday issues, so The Press-Guardian, including what little lineage it carries Saturdays, plus its Sunday issue, carried a total of 10,588,683 lines of paid advertising, the largest in the city.

The Press-Guardian does not carry advertising on an exchange basis nor copy from "fly-by-night" concerns and had no special editions in 1925.

The Press-Guardian recently purchased a 3-story corner building adjacent to its present property and placed an order two months ago, for installation this spring for a modern high-speed, low unit sextuple metropolitan Duplex press and this year The Press-Guardian will not be handicapped, as it was in 1925, in printing and distributing a sufficient number of copies to meet the demand and in handling its ever increasing volume of advertising.

Industrially Great PENNSYLVANIA Is a Big Consumer

The census of manufacture in Pennsylvania, 1923, reported 19,055 industrial establishments with 1,095,066 employees (an increase of 26.8 per cent over 1921), earning $1,450,826,374 wages, (increase 44.1 per cent), and a product valued at $7,438,609,142 (increase of 47 per cent over $5,059,009,410 in 1921). Steel works and rolling mills (186) led in employees 167,662 (an increase of 53.9 per cent over 108,960 in 1921), with wages of $272,189,711 and an output of $1,292,222,273 (an increase of 100.1 per cent over $645,759,871 in 1921). Foundry and machine shop products were valued at $344,064,225 ($238,197,741 in 1921); electrical machinery, etc, $201,177,706 ($116,577,178 in 1921); blast furnaces, $377,227,181 ($164,558,350 in 1921); steam railroad repair shops, $245,098,336 ($193,711,154 in 1921); steam railroad cars, $115,589,913 ($69,163,002 in 1921); automobile bodies and parts, $64,013,627 ($25,508,262 in 1921); silk manufactures, $286,073,270 ($224,195,519 in 1921); knit goods, $221,183,510 ($177,149,526 in 1921); worsted goods, $116,959,148 ($85,231,872 in 1921); cotton goods, $91,685,658 ($58,345,121 in 1921); cigars and cigarettes, $119,655,073; glass $99,197,880; and men's clothing, $100,829,552 ($78,422,296 in 1921); and printing and publishing, newspapers and periodicals, $142,113,747 ($121,004,569 in 1921).

Since the above statistics were compiled, there has been a greater increase of production in the Keystone State and the people of this territory will buy enormous quantities of foodstuffs, clothing, hardware, furniture, paints, toilet preparations, tobacco, automobiles, insurance and many other necessities and luxuries.

There is assurance of big business to the National Advertisers who will use persistent, effective copy in the Pennsylvania daily newspapers. Your advertising campaign should be an extensive one.

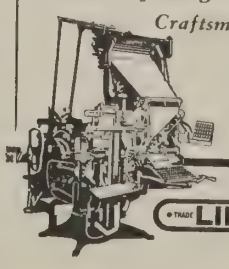
From the Linotype Mailbag

"Loud Speaker" and "Silent Night"

"When there is trouble it is broadcasted through the 'Loud Speaker,' but when there is complete satisfaction it is more like 'Silent Night.'



"We recently installed two Model 25 Linotypes and from the time the operators started to work on these machines they have produced steadily. Even the first day a good string was set on both machines.

"Only once after your erector left was our machinist called on to make a slight adjustment, and since, which was a month ago, they have been running without a stop.

"This not only speaks well for the way these machines were turned out by the factory, but for the machinist who set them up.

"To say that we are entirely satisfied with the machines and your service is putting it just as it is."

THE SOUTH

Industrial Heart of the Country

During the past quarter century the South has so exploited her resources in raw materials, power and population, that the true value of all property in the South today equals that of the entire United States in 1900.

The value of the South's cotton manufacturing in 1921 was $560,813,000 as compared with $339,200,000 for the entire United States in 1900. 2,161,344,000 lbs. of cotton are consumed annually as compared to 1,817,643,000 lbs. for the entire United States in 1900.

In furniture manufacturing the Southern production of over $91,000,000 is two thirds that of the entire country twenty-five years ago.

One half of the lumber cut in the United States is cut in the sixteen Southern states.

Farm property in the South has risen in value to $21,685,380,000, a greater valuation than that of all the farms in the United States twenty-five years ago.

National bank deposits of the United States amounted to $2,508,248,557 in 1900. In the South, in 1923, the deposits amounted to $2,881,870,000.

For improved communication in developing commercial centers, the South, in 1923 spent $291,945,000 as against $59,527,170 spent by the entire United States in 1904.

With the rapid development of its industries necessary to balance its agricultural scheme, the South presents to National advertisers the richest market in the country for sales promotion.

Direct your message to every home of the eight most important Southern states by using all the daily newspapers on the following list.

800,000 ITALIANS are residents of New York and vicinity. A very large percentage of this great number are readers of the

Corriere D' America

An illustrated daily publication printed in the Italian language.

It is an A. B. C. publication and is edited by Mr. Barzini who has an international reputation for his highly ethical and moral attitude in the newspaper field. Its editorial matter is high class, and its readers have faith in their paper because they have faith in its Editor.

It has attained a net circulation of 60,000 copies in less than two years, a record for a foreign language newspaper.

Replies to a recent inquiry disclosed the fact that 63% of its readers own their own homes, automobiles and pianos. It endeavors in every way to consistently tie up its advertisements with special readers.

Rates furnished on application.

The New York Staats Zeitung and Herold blankets the German-American Market of New York.

There are 125,000 German families in this territory of whom over 70,000 own and occupy their own homes, this conclusively proves the wealth and stability of the Germans in this territory.

The Staats Zeitung and Herold was established 92 years ago.

A Few Facts About

ILLINOIS

That Should Interest National Advertisers

ILLINOIS Twenty-third state in area is third in population, with 6,500,000 people.

ILLINOIS Stands first in agricultural commerce and is the center of agricultural commerce in the United States.

ILLINOIS Stands second among all the states in value of total farm buildings and second in value of total farm property.

ILLINOIS Has more railroad trackage per square mile than any other state, with 12,545 miles of steam line and 2,700 miles of electric road.

ILLINOIS Has more concrete highway than any other state in the union and more miles of concrete roadway to the square mile.

ILLINOIS Has 237,181 farms with 31,974,775 acres, and yet the industrial interest of Illinois far exceeds the agricultural.

Consider the great buying power of the people of this state, and the favorable transportation and distributing facilities when planning your National Advertising.

The Growth of Powers Engraving Companies

Is the result of rendering continuous satisfaction

Complete day and night service for newspapers, publications and advertising agencies.

We have kept step with the mechanical departments of the newspapers in the progress of recent years.

We are pioneers of new methods—

Spending thousands of dollars every year in experimenting on and developing new processes for the advancement of the industry by improving the quality of our engravings

Developed cold enamel process on zinc, which is far superior to any other method ever used for line engravings

Perfected hot enamel on zinc and copper, and raised the standard of engravings on both metals

Invented, and developed the wet cooler, which prevents buckling—simplying the method and improving quality

Developed, burning-in stove, and etching machines

Invented, and developed emulsion film camera, which produces results that are far superior to the old colliodion process.

PULITZER PRIZE AWARDS—1925

For the best editorial article written during the year, the test of excellence being clearness of style, moral purpose, sound reasoning and power to influence public opinion in the right direction, due account being taken for the whole volume of the editorial writer's work during the year—$500.—Awarded to the Charleston (S. C.) News and Courier, for the editorial entitled "The Plight of the South," published Nov. 5, 1924.

For the best example of a reporter's work during the year, the test being strict accuracy, terseness, the accomplishment of some public good commanding public attention and respect, $1,000.—Awarded in duplicate to James W. Mulroy and Alvin H. Goldstein for their service, while members of the staff of the Chicago Daily News, toward the solution of the murder of Robert Franks, Jr., in Chicago, May 22, 1924, and the bringing to justice of Nathan F. Leopold and Richard Loeb.

For the best cartoon published in any American newspaper during the year, the determining qualities being that the cartoon shall embody an idea made clearly apparent, shall show good drawing and striking pictorial effect and shall be helpful to some commendable cause of public importance, due account being taken for the whole volume of the artist's newspaper work during the year, $500.—Awarded to Rolin Kirby of the New York World for the cartoon entitled "News From the Outside World," published Oct. 5, 1924.

There was no award "for the most disinterested and meritorious public service rendered by any American newspaper," the announcement declaring that no instance of such service of the notable qualities for which previous awards had been made had been submitted this year to the judges.

The award for the "best history of the services rendered to the public by the American press", was not made, for lack of competition.

For the American novel published during the year which shall best respect the wholesome atmosphere of American life and the highest standard of American manners and manhood, $1,000.—Awarded to "So Big," by Edna Ferber, published by Doubleday, Page & Co., Garden City, N. Y., 1924.

For the original American play, performed in New York, which shall best represent the educational value and power of the stage in raising the standard of good morals, good taste and good manners, $1,000.—Awarded to "They Knew What They Wanted," by Sidney Howard, produced at the Klaw Theatre in New York during the season 1924-1925.

For the best book of the year upon the history of the United States, $2,000.—Awarded to "A History of the American Frontier," by Frederick L. Paxson, published by Houghton, Mifflin Company, Boston, Mass., 1924.

For the best American biography teaching patriotic and unselfish services to the people, illustrated by an eminent example, excluding, as too obvious, the names of George Washington and Abraham Lincoln, $1,000.—Awarded to "Barrett Wendell and His Letters," by M. A. DeWolfe Howe, published by the Atlantic Monthly Press, Inc., Boston, Mass., 1924.

For the best volume of verse published during the year by an American author, $1,000.—Awarded to "The Man Who Died Twice," by Edwin Arlington Robinson, published by the Macmillan Company, New York, 1924.

Three traveling scholarships, having the value of $1,500 each, to graduates of the School of Journalism who shall have passed their examinations with the highest honor and are otherwise most deserving, to enable each of them to spend a year in Europe, to study the social, political and moral conditions of the people, and the character and principles of the European press. Awarded: Daniel Robert Maue, Monticello, Minn.; William C. Worthington, Providence, R. I., and Richmond B. Williams, Brooklyn. Alternates: Theodore Bernstein, New York; Dorothy Dodd, Tallahassee, Fla., and Cicely Applebaum, New York.

An annual scholarship, having the value of $1,500, to the student of music in America who may be deemed the most talented and deserving, in order that he may continue his studies with the advantage of European instruction. In view of the great merit of the works presented, two scholarships having a value of $1,500 each, were awarded to Douglas Moore, of Cleveland, O., and to Leopold D. Mannes, of New York City.

Use the Daily Papers in INDIANA

For Satisfactory Results

Indiana is typically American with 91.8 per cent native born whites. Illiteracy is low at 2.2 per cent—only 1.3 per cent of the native born white are illiterate.

Being loyal to their country and state, the Indiana people are particularly interested in their respective communities.

Being intelligent people, the Indiana folks are regular and thorough readers of their daily newspapers, and their community interest includes patronage of local dealers.

The local dealers will stock up on any product demanded by their patrons.

This demand can be created by advertising in the daily newspapers that go into the Indiana homes.

Merchandising facilities are ideal in Indiana because of the close contact between the towns and the rural districts and the excellent transportation facilities.

FOLLOW THE LEAD OF YOUR EDITORS

—in Church publicity

The importance of church attendance is coming to the front in newspapers more and more. A few years ago church news seldom, if ever, appeared on the first page of a newspaper. Now, because editors are sensing the growing interest of the public in religion and church activities, numerous editorials are appearing daily and it is not uncommon to see church news on page 1.

Advertising Managers have a great opportunity to further the development of their pages by following the lead of the editors in church publicity.

Develop church advertising in your pages and let us help with plans and our new series of cooperative Come-to-Church advertisements.

Wilke's METALS
THE HIGHEST STANDARD

Quality in Type Metals

Means This:

IN TERMS of actual performance quality in Type Metals means the best results at the least expense and trouble. It means a minimum of drossage and low casting temperatures—low heating and replacement costs.

In slug-casting and type-casting machines quality in Type Metals means solid bodies, and clear and sharp printing faces.

In stereotyping it means solid plates, without pin-holes, sinks or shrinks—a cleanly printed sheet.

"Wilke's" Type Metals are known for the satisfaction they give the user. They have established new high standards in the Type Metals business. The quality of "Wilke's" Type Metals is always maintained.

U. S. FIGURES ON PUBLISHING BUSINESS

THE Department of Commerce announces that, according to the data collected at the biennial census of manufacturers, 1923, the establishments engaged primarily in printing and publishing newspapers and periodicals reported a total output valued at $1,268,501,566, an increase of 12.9 per cent as compared with 1921, the last preceding census year.

Of the total for 1923, $793,898,584 was contributed by receipts from advertising, $361,178,329 by subscriptions and sales, and the remaining $113,424,653 by revenues from a variety of sources, including job printing, the printing and publishing of books and pamphlets, machine composition for others, etc.

Summary statistics for 1923 and 1921 are presented in the following tables. The figures for 1923 are preliminary and subject to such correction as may be found necessary upon further examination of the returns.

TABLE 1.—GENERAL STATISTICS FOR THE INDUSTRY: 1923 AND 1921

Vermont Also Leads In Freedom From Labor Disputes

Sign Posts of Buying Power No. 29

Vermont, New Mexico and South Dakota are the only states reported by the United States Department of Labor as being entirely free from labor disputes, strikes or lockouts during 1923. (Figures for 1924 not yet available.)

Vermont, distinctly a manufacturing as well as farming state, employs about six times as many factory workers as either New Mexico or South Dakota. Vermont's leadership in favorable labor conditions is therefore hardly open to question.

Uninterrupted wages mean unfluctuating buying power. Vermont laborers will spend as steadily and freely tomorrow as they have spent today or yesterday—not a certain proportion of them—not just a few of them—all of them!

They all work contentedly, persistently, energetically, successfully, in Vermont—even advertising appropriations!

The Nation's Automobile Makers Show a Still Greater Preference for The Daily News in Chicago

In 1925 the nation's automobile makers again placed more of their advertising in The Daily News than in any other Chicago daily newspaper—and increased their space in The Daily News 146,000 agate lines over 1924.

Here, in the country's second largest automobile market, these manufacturers sought and found in The Daily News the strongest sales influence that any Chicago daily newspaper could give them. Their choice was confirmed by the country's keenest motor car merchandisers, the distributors and dealers who SELL their cars in Chicago and KNOW Chicago daily newspapers.

The large part played by The Daily News in the sales campaigns of these manufacturers is indicated by the following record of the space they bought in The Daily News in 1925:

Buick	58,312 lines	Hupmobile	17,526 lines	Rollin	3,894 lines
Studebaker	39,745 lines	Pierce-Arrow	15,519 lines	Peerless	2,064 lines
Hudson-Essex	31,500 lines	Reo	14,138 lines	Moon-Diana	1,173 lines
Ford-Lincoln	30,054 lines	Chandler	14,000 lines	Gardner	1,000 lines
Chevrolet	27,573 lines	Oldsmobile	11,893 lines	Locomobile	885 lines
Willys-Overland	25,985 lines	Nash-Ajax	10,910 lines	Jordan	800 lines
Cadillac	25,096 lines	Durant-Flint-Star	10,581 lines	Packard	720 lines
Franklin	22,304 lines	Rickenbacker	8,706 lines	Elcar	442 lines
Chrysler	19,727 lines	Oakland	8,563 lines	Velie	318 lines
Dodge	18,323 lines	Paige-Jewett	5,182 lines	Stutz	202 lines
Cleveland	17,646 lines	Wills-Sainte Claire	4,197 lines

The basis for this expression of confidence in The Chicago Daily News is the proven ability of this paper among all Chicago daily newspapers to produce results.

During 1925 The Daily News published 718,455 agate lines of automotive advertising, including both motor cars and accessories, showing a gain of 160,114 lines over 1924. This gain is nearly three times that of the leading morning daily, whose total lineage fell short of The Daily News total by 218,220 lines. In fact The Daily News gain was more than 60% of the entire gain of all Chicago daily newspapers.

In Chicago, the country's second largest and highly competitive metropolitan market, the selection of daily newspapers ceased long ago to be a speculation or an experiment among both dealers and makers of automobiles as well as accessories. Their preference for The Daily News is conclusive proof that Daily News advertising is an investment that pays—and pays well.

Baltimore Must Be "Shown" On Shows

¶ If you don't believe it—ask any theatrical man. He knows that if he has the stuff in his show he'll get the business. But he also knows that a half-way attraction will get less than half-filled houses.

¶ That same producer—or any other producer—can tell you something else. He'll tell you that in no other city are there newspapers which affect box-office receipts as do the Sunpapers of Baltimore.

¶ Baltimore trusts Sunpaper "reviews"—accepts the Sunpapers' estimate of a show's worth—and reacts accordingly.

¶ The influence of the Sunpapers overflows from the editorial to the advertising columns. A city which has grown up with almost implicit faith in the Sunpapers—feels the same faith in the articles advertised in these Sunpapers.

¶ When you aim to reach the buyers of Baltimore in the homes of Baltimore—put your trust in the papers Baltimore trusts.

Only Two Anti-Fascist Dailies Survive Premier Mussolini's Press Gag

Copies of Il Mondo and La Voce Repubblicana "Bootlegged" in Rome as Other Papers Become Propaganda Organs or Maintain Silence—Story of Rigid Censorship Told by Insider

By PHILIP SCHUYLER

Facts which form the basis of this story were obtained by EDITOR & PUBLISHER from a former American correspondent in Rome. Because its publication might prove embarassing to the interests he represented in Italy, his name must be kept in confidence. The correspondent in question worked actively in Italy's capital, and speaks with authority in disclosing the details of Mussolini's relations with the domestic and foreign press.

A VIVID picture of the slow strangulation of the anti-fascist press in Italy under the iron hand of Benito Mussolini was obtained this week by EDITOR & PULISHER from a reliable source.

Only two outstanding opposition papers are being published in Italy today, it was learned, and even they are being rapidly and systematically starved by the suppression policy of the fascist government. These two are Il Mondo and La Voce Repubblicana, both of Rome.

Both are continuing to publish, but their editions are seized and efforts made to keep them from general circulation practically every day for apparently no reason at all in many cases.

The policy of the Mussolini government and laws drawn up to uphold it make it possible for fascist authorities to suppress and confiscate at a moment's notice editions of a paper containing news unfavorable to the fascist cause. And the Mussolini-made anti-press freedom laws are also being invoked in many instances without rhyme or reason, simply to starve out newspapers known to be opposed to the dictator.

Thus copies of Il Mondo and La Voce Repubblicana must be purchased clandestinely on the streets of Rome, pulled covertly from beneath the coats of news vendors and smuggled away to privacy much in the manner of liquor traffic in Prohibition America. And, even as bootleg liquor proves often disappointing and "without a kick," so purchasers of these professed anti-fascist journals frequently search the pages in vain for any editorial denouncement of Mussolini, or any news of fascist disorders, which otherwise would have been suppressed, since by order of the prefects the copies have supposedly been legally kept from the streets. It represents the constant effort on Mussolini's part to stamp out even the barest possibility of opposition to his dictates.

Italy is divided into districts each governed by a prefect, appointed by the central government. According to the Mussolini law now in force definitely prohibiting freedom of the press to report anything but news favorable to the fascist regime, a copy of every paper published in each district must be submitted to the prefect before it is put in general circulation. Editors are not permitted to submit proofs. The complete make-up of the paper must be seen first by the prefect before public distribution. The prefect is furnished with autocratic power to suppress.

Within the past year some newspaper victims of this policy have been:

Milan Corriere de la Sera, frequently described as "the New York Times of Italy," under new editorship now supporting Mussolini.

Turin La Stampa, formerly anti-fascist, now pro-fascistized.

Milan L'Avanti, suppressed as anti-fascist.

Milan Unita, put out of business because of anti-government views.

Rome Journal Italie, formerly opposed, now favorable to the government.

Naples Il Mattino, changed ownership, and now fascist.

Rome Il Risorgimento, the morning edition of Il Mondo, still publishing, but forced frequently to distribute clandestinely.

Rome Tribuna, formerly neutral, now fascist.

Fascist papers in Rome started up to replace suppressed anti-fascist publications include L'Impero, Il Trevere, which is ultra-fascist, and Il Popolo di Roma. Il Messaggero is the old established pro-fascist paper.

Roberto Farinacci, general secretary of the fascist party in Italy, is also proprietor of Il Regime, published in Cremona, and it is in this paper that many campaigns against the anti-fascist press originate. Il Regime may, for instance, issue an editorial broadside against an anti-fascist publication, asserting the paper attacked should be suppressed. The howl is immediately taken up by other pro-government editors and subsidized papers, until sufficient public sentiment is created to thrust the knife of complete suppression into the heart of the offending publication.

It is alleged suppression of Il Mattino of Naples and La Stampa of Turin followed attacks launched by Il Regime. When the Italian army was called out for manoeuvers this fall, these two papers arranged for joint coverage of the event. La Stampa sent a number of its staff, Luigi Ambrosini, to represent both papers.

Ambrosini was not a military expert, but he was a good writer. His stories filed from the scene of manoeuvers were imaginative accounts picturing the sham battles as actual war scenes. To the intelligent the imaginative qualities made pleasant reading and were easily discernable; but the literal minded objected when Ambrosini in one of his prose fights, described the possibility of all these soldiers looting homes, sacking villages, and violating women if war were actually in progress.

Ambrosini was arrested, charged with treason, for slandering the army. Farinacci's paper immediately began making editorial demands for drastic action against La Stampa and Il Mattino, newspapers which had employed the arrested correspondent. Thereupon the editor of La Stampa and the owners of Il Mattino were also arrested. All were subsequently tried and sentenced to seven months imprisonment and payment of large fines.

Il Mattino at that time was owned and operated by the two Scarfoglio brothers and was considered a valuable newspaper property. For years it had been anti-fascist. Stirred up by Farinacci, according to report, the fascist organization in Naples after the Ambrosini affair, decided to boycott Il Mattino. Besides refusing to purchase copies themselves, strong arm methods were resorted to on occasion to prevent sale to the loyal friends of the paper. The Scarfoglio brothers, in consequence, were virtually forced to sell out. The purchaser was Guiseppe Barattolo, then a fascist deputy, but later deposed.

Because the domestic press has thus been made sterile, American correspondents in Italy are to a great extent as much in the dark regarding fascist disorders as though they were in New York instead of Rome.

Chief reliance of American newspaper men abroad has, of course, always been the domestic press of the country to which they were assigned. Foreign offices are generally suspected of being propaganda dispensers, and while the correspondents have their own private sources for news, and may obtain interviews with opposition leaders, the editorial opinions of the newspapers are customarily needed to complete the picture.

In Italy, in addition to the virtually complete subjugation of the press, there are but few outstanding opposition leaders, and the censorship is complete and powerful, despite Mussolini's repeated denials.

"There is no censorship", it will be solemnly announced one week, and the next it will be as gravely stated that "censorship has been repealed."

Nothing but news favorable to Mussolini and fascism is allowed to go on the cables. Even supposedly harmless stories picked up from tourists regarding traveling conditions are spiked, if they can be interpreted as in the least unfavorable to conditions in Italy.

Mail received by correspondents held under suspicion by the foreign office has on occasion, it is known, been opened and read and sealed again before delivery. Correspondents are given reason to believe that every cable and telegram sent to them from the outside is handed to the Minister of the Interior for his inspection, before it is delivered.

Former Premier Orlando, who at first tolerant of the fascist regime, was later forced out and became a leader of the opposition in the Chamber, used to be a good source for news which otherwise could not be obtained. But now he is beginning to realize the futility of opposing the dictator without newspaper support.

News suppressed by the Mussolini regime in addition to opinions unfavorable to him and his government concern Black Shirt raids on Catholic Clubs, attempts made to coerce nuns and priests to the fascist program and labor disputes arising from the fact that only fascist employer and labor organizations are recognized by the government. All questions regarding wages and working conditions must be decided by professed fascist groups to obtain government sanction.

About a year and a half ago communists hung out red flags on telegraph poles in Rome and, gathering outside the Premier's palace shouted "Down with Mussolini!" This story was partially covered by the Rome press. An American got further details from an eye-witness and attempted to put it on the cable. He stated the facts without elaboration, but to no avail. The story was censored, and the reporter, called up on the foreign office carpet, was severely reprimanded for his "sensationalism."

EDITORS OF SUPPRESSED ITALIAN PAPERS MARKED FOR PUNISHMENT UNDER NEW LAW

NEWS dispatches reaching this country from Rome last week told of approval by the Italian Senate of the Expatriates Law, which empowers the government to punish voluntary expatriates who act against the interests of the nation by deprivation of citizenship and confiscation of property. The law went to King Victor Emanuel for his signature January 28.

The official newspaper said that among those marked for punishment under the new law were Giuseppe Donati, former editor of Il Popolo, Rome, and Pietro Nenni, former editor of Milan L' Avanti, suppressed by the facist government.

Dr. Donati fled from Italy last June, following acquittal of the Fascist leader, Gen. de Bono, against whom he brought charges of complicity in the kidnapping and assassination of Deputy Matteotti.

Dr. Nenni was wounded last November in a dual fought with Curzio Suckert, editor of the fascist paper Conquista, following a newspaper controversy.

GANNETT AND CONGDON NAMED TO HEAD N. Y. NEWSPAPER GROUPS

Former Leads State Publishers for Fifth Time, Latter President of Associated Dailies—Ad Managers Lay Plans to Make N. Y. "Try-out" State

NEWSPAPER publishers, editors, advertising men, and members of the Associated Press in New York State held one of their most successful annual meetings for three days last weekend at Hotel Syracuse, Syracuse. More than 80 attended the sessions and the meetings ironed out many problems of publishing and production.

FRANK E. GANNETT

The New York State Publishers closed their sessions Friday afternoon, Jan. 29, with the reelection of Frank E. Gannett of the Rochester Times-Union as president for the fifth time in spite of his protest he had held the office long enough. Other officers chosen were Jerome D. Barnum, Syracuse Post-Standard, first vice-president; Arthur D. Hecox, Albany Knickerbocker Press, second vice-president; Charles H. Congdon, Watertown Times, reelected secretary; Gardiner Kline, Amsterdam Recorder, treasurer.

The New York members of the Associated Dailies closed their meeting the afternoon previous with the election of Charles H. Congdon, Watertown Times, president; Frank L. Rogers, Gloversville Leader Republican, vice-president; E. S. Underhill, Jr., Corning Leader, secretary-treasurer.

CHARLES H. CONGDON

The New York members of the Associated Press met Thursday afternoon to discuss questions brought up by members of the wire service upstate. Edward S. McKernon, superintendent of the Eastern division, addressed the gathering.

Frederick P. Hall, editor of the Jamestown Journal, who was elected by the state members of the Associated Press at their annual meeting in October as the organization's representative on the Eastern Division Advisory Board of The Associated Press, reported on the proceedings of that board.

The Advertising Department of the publishers association opened its meeting Thursday afternoon and passed a resolution opposing co-operation with firms whose advertisements appear exclusively in mediums other than newspapers. The action followed discussion of magazine and newspaper advertising. Each member was urged to write to advertisers concerned giving reasons for refusal.

A definite plan for developing New York State as a field for starting national advertising campaigns was presented to the publishers session by a committee consisting of Edward A. O'Hara, Syracuse Herald; E. R. Gosling, Rochester Times-Union; and Frank Hill, Oneonta Star. Headquarters for the work is at Utica, centered in the office of R. C. Harris, secretary-treasurer, Utica Press.

Members of the Associated Dailies met separately Thursday, and, according to custom, considered a regular list of questions submitted in advance. These questions numbered 28, distributed among advertising, typographical, editorial, mechanical, circulation, and business departments. At the closing session a message was sent to Wallace Odell, Tarrytown News, former president of the National Editorial Association who is ill in Florida, expressing hope for his speedy recovery.

A committee was appointed to consider and present a proposition to organize in the association a plan whereby each member would be represented in the national advertising field. This committee is composed of E. D. Carson, Lockport Union-Sun and Journal; E. M. Waterbury, Oswego Palladium-Times; E. H. Clark, Cortland Standard.

All organizations attended the joint banquet Thursday evening. The speakers were Grove Patterson, editor of the Toledo Blade, who discussed the duty of the newspaper, and Hugh O'Donnell, assistant business manager of the New York Times, who told of that newspaper's rise to its present standing and the factors which had made it successful as outlined by its publisher, Adolph S. Ochs.

Mr. Patterson listed the four major undertakings of newspapers as follows:

To furnish an accurate information service in the proportion that experience and accumulated technique have taught.

To act, in the editorial columns, as a brake upon the leaping chariot wheels of a doubtful democracy.

To enlarge its facilities and to become something more than a newspaper—to become an institution.

One of the principal problems discussed at the Friday session of the publishers was the question of the proposed increase of carrying newspapers at baggage rates on the railroads from 30 to 50 cents per-hundred pounds. Arthur D. Hecox, chairman of this committee, gave a lengthy report in which he stated such an increase would mean the publishers of the State outside of New York City would have to shoulder an extra cost of $27,000 annually. It was voted to continue the committee with power to act in presenting the publishers' case before the proposed increase comes up for consideration before the Public Service Commission May 1. Mr. Hecox mentioned that 80 per cent of the shipments of papers among members were under 50 miles.

President Gannett in accepting reelection stated he wanted to see a membership campaign which would be representative 100 per cent among publishers in the State. It was pointed out that only a few of the larger dailies are not represented and it is hoped they will join in order to strengthen the association in its efforts to bring about concerted action on all question which mean some benefit to every newspaper publisher.

Fred H. Keefe of the Newburgh News, chairman of the legislative committee, reported the desirability of a meeting with the New York City publishers over action to be taken by all publishers in the State on certain bills to be brought up at Albany, and such a meeting will take place as soon as arrangements can be made.

A bill designed to discontinue stuffing of circulars in copies of newspapers was favored by the members. Opposition was voiced against the proposed bill which would require foreign language newspapers to print a column in English beside the columns in foreign language, as it was deemed an unnecessary hardship. Some discussion took place over a proposed bill designed by professional optometrists to prevent such professional men from advertising as is the case with physicians and lawyers.

Jerome D. Barnum, who has been active relative to the settlement of labor matters, presented his report.

Ross W. Kellogg, director of the Empire State School of Printing, made a report of activities at the school and invited the publishers to the next commencement. It was voted to have the school incorporated and steps taken to have the "Printing University" obtain a charter from the New York State Board of Regents.

The New Jersey Press Association will be invited to join with the New York State Publishers Association in it semi-annual meeting in Ithaca next June.

STRONG NAMES SMITH CHICAGO NEWS M. E.

Former News Editor Under Lawson Rejoins Staff After Serving Chicago University Campaign—With News Since 1898

Henry Justin Smith is to return to the Chicago Daily News, Feb. 8, as managing editor, Charles H. Dennis, becoming editor. Brooks Beitler remains a news editor and John Craig a city editor.

HENRY J. SMITH

Mr. Smith was graduated from the University of Chicago in the class of 1898, going to work immediately for the News. He remained with the paper until June, 1925, when his alma mater asked the late Victor F. Lawson to give Mr. Smith, then new editor, a leave of absence to take charge of the publicity program in connection with the University's campaign for $17,500,000 for buildings and endowments.

Mr. Smith is the author of two novels "Deadlines" and "Josslyn" dealing with the newspaper business, as well as "It's the Way it's Written," a brochure on newspaper style.

DAILIES ADOPT COLOR POLICY

Toledo Papers Agree to Refrain from Featuring Negro Crime News

The three Toledo, O., dailies, the Blade, the News-Bee and the Times, have agreed to refrain from featuring Negro crime news.

Reiterating the Blade's policy, the following rules recently appeared on the Blade bulletin board under the signature of Charles R. Corbin, assistant managing editor:

"1. The Blade does not want to play up the fact that any person figuring in the news is colored, nor does it want to suppress the racial adjective in every case. The fact of color should not be stressed in the news, but mentioned casually, if at all.

"2. The color is never to be used in a headline.

"3. The term 'colored' is to be used whenever possible in place of 'Negro.' 'Negress' must NEVER be used. 'Black' is prohibited.

"4. Whenever 'Negro' is used it must be capitalized. The word is seldom necessary, however, except where it is part of the name of an organization, such as 'Negro Business Men's Association,' or something of that sort."

Frank Heller, editor of the News-Bee and John Dun, editor of the Times, also adopted the above policy on color.

EDITOR SAVED FROM DROWNING

C. J. Lilly of Houston Press, Phones Experience Story from Hospital

Charles J. Lilly, editor of the Houston Press had a narrow escape from death when a launch on which he was riding caught fire in East Bay, Galveston. Lilly was with Mayor Oscar Holcombe of Houston, S. Moody, Galveston bankers and a party of duck hunters. Edwin Warnken, lawyer and member of the party, died from exposure after being rescued.

Lilly, the mayor, and Brady Steele the mayor's brother-in-law were in the icy water two hours before being saved. Before being put to bed in a Galveston hospital Lilly insisted upon phoning his office and arranging for an early morning extra. He later dictated a personal experience story of what happened.

"My biggest fear in the water was that I wouldn't live to write the story," Lilly said.

CRUSADE LANDS NEW YORK EDITOR IN COURT

H. S. Pollard, Evening World, to Be Arraigned on Contempt Charge Feb. 16, Following Stirring Fight Against Easy Bail System—Is Disciple of Elder Pulitzer

By PHILIP SCHUYLER

"EXERCISING the right of free speech in these days is apt to force one to herd a while with pickpockets and bootleggers in a cell."

This opinion appeared in the New York Evening World last April in an editorial captioned "Back to the Alien and Sedition Laws."

Harold Stanley Pollard, editor of the same newspaper always fearless and outspoken, subsequently made use of what he believed to be his right of free opinion in a crusade against easy bail, and it has landed him in the courts in contempt proceedings brought by Supreme Court Justice Aaron J. Levy.

Justice Levy charges that three editorials written by Mr. Pollard constitute a "false or grossly inaccurate report" of proceedings before him, and that they "tended to bring into disrepute the administration of the law and to destroy the confidence of the public in, and its respect for, the procedings of our courts."

Mr. Pollard was summoned to appear before Justice Levy Friday, Jan. 29, to show cause why he should not be punished. At the request of his attorney, Charles Brophy, the hearing was postponed until Feb. 16.

Under the state judiciary law invoked by Justice Levy, Mr. Pollard is liable to punishment of a fine not exceeding $250, or imprisonment not exceeding 30 days, or both at the discretion of the court.

Other than admitting that he himself wrote the editorials in question, Mr. Pollard would not discuss the case this week with EDITOR & PUBLISHER.

"It would be highly improper for me to do so at this time," he said.

The writer this week made a careful examination of the Evening World's editorial crusade against "easy bail," a crusade which originated in the mind of Mr. Pollard, an intimate disciple of the famous elder Joseph Pulitzer, and which has been conducted so far entirely by Mr. Pollard's hand.

The crusade started last Sept. 25, when as the leading editorial in the Evening World of that date, Mr. Pollard asked the question, "Is there any limit to what New York must suffer from the practice of releasing confirmed criminals on easy bail so that they may commit more crimes?"

Mr. Pollard began to name names three days' later, when appeared the first of the three editorials against which Justice Levy specifically complains. Then these questions were asked in an editorial entitled, "Shopping for Low Bail."

"Why does a confirmed criminal hereabout obtain such easy bail that he can commit a whole series of new crimes while earlier indictments against him are pending? Why permit a crook with a known criminal record to treat bail as a mere occasional expense incidental to his trade? Why does one judge reduce bail fixed by another judge?"

The editorial was based on the alleged case of a prisoner arraigned as a second offender before Judge Mulqueen in General Sessions on an indictment charging burglary in the third degree. The prison record was bad, according to the editorial, with three previous indictments pending against him for the current year. The editorial then alleges:

"Judge Mulqueen fixed the new bail at $50,000, and what happened? The prisoner's counsel applied to the Supreme Court for reduction of bail and Supreme Court Justice Aaron J. Levy ordered it reduced to $10,000. The man was released—and re-arrested last week, charged with being in possession of stolen goods."

The second editorial complained of by Justice Levy appeared Oct. 20. Then this question was asked:

"On what grounds do Supreme Court Justices reduce bail fixed by county judges in the case of defendents with long criminal records?" In this editorial the Evening World names Justice Levy's alleged connection with two cases of "easy bail."

The editorial reads:

"Take the case of Herman Rothenberg, arraigned in Manhattan last Sunday, believed by police to be a leader of a gang of loft thieves. Three indictments are already pending against Rothenberg, two for loft robberies. . . . Judge Mulqueen ordered Rothenberg held without bail until he made his decision. Meanwhile, Rothenberg's lawyer went before a Supreme Court Justice and got bail fixed at only $10,000."

Fights "Easy Bail"—Harold S. Pollard.

In another case cited in the same editorial, that of a certain Paul Schweitzer, the Evening World alleges Justice Levy reduced a $25,000 bail to $15,000. These allegations are repeated in the third editorial objected to by Justice Levy, which was printed on Oct. 27, entitled "Bargain Counter Bail."

In addition to Justice Levy, Mr. Pollard in the Evening World has also editorially alleged that Supreme Court Justice Mitchell May has cut bail fixed at $10,000 to $3,500.

The "easy bail" system in New York which is being attacked by the Evening World, was recently described editorially:

"Over and over again this city has seen cases of criminals out on small bail re-arrested for burglary, hold-up or theft, who obviously made use of their freedom to obtain by new crime the money they needed to defend themselves against older charges. Is that what bail is for?

"The ugly fact is that New York has become one of the pleasantest places in the world for the confirmed crook to call 'home.'"

To find out just what bail is for, Mr. Pollard gathered together and printed a symposium of the opinions of eminent authorities of Bench and Bar around the question "Is Bail a Constitutional Right?" This symposium was concluded and summarized in a three-column editorial published Jan. 27, the day before Mr. Pollard was summoned to appear before Justice Levy. The editorial was entitled "Bail is not a Constitutional Right in this State," and presented these three conclusions, before epitomizing the opinions of the judges and lawyers consulted:

"There is no constitutional reason why every Judge in the city and State should not make it a practice to deny bail to a confirmed criminal whose record shows he is likely to use his freedom on bail to commit fresh crimes.

"There is no constitutional bar to amending the Code of Criminal Procedure to make refusal of bail mandatory in the case of confirmed criminals charged with new felonies.

"There is no constitutional ground for judges, district attorneys, lawyers or anyone else to argue that bail for a known criminal is a matter of right in New York; no ground, legal or sentimental for the false premise that the bail privilege cannot be further restricted without violating the fundamental law of State and Nation."

The crusade, thus climaxed, has not been barren of results. While the attack against easy bail originated in the tower of the Pulitzer Building on Park Row, other New York and Brooklyn newspapers have also taken it up. Editorials denouncing the easy bail system, have appeared in the New York Herald Tribune, the New York Sun, the Home News, Brooklyn Daily Eagle and other dailies. The Sun ran a long series on the subject in its news columns written by a staff man, John Larkin.

On Nov. 20, about two months after the Evening World had fired the opening gun, the Prison Committee of the Association of Grand Jurors recommended reform of the bailing system, along lines which had previously been suggested editorially by Mr. Pollard. The same editorial, mentioning the alleged case of Herman Rothenberg, was reprinted in the Prison Committee's report. The name of the Supreme Court Justice concerned, however, was left blank.

"The present unrestricted and haphazard practice of releasing criminals on bail," the Prison Committee reported, "is probably the greatest single factor in nullifying effective work accomplished by Police Department of New York City."

The Evening world's campaign opposing the alleged practice of Supreme Court judges reducing bail fixed by judges in lower courts, represents Mr. Pollard's first editorial tilt with the tribunals.

Ever since he began writing editorials for the Evening World in 1911—during the last five years he has been editor of that newspaper—Mr. Pollard has originated and carried through to success many campaigns for the public betterment and protection.

Seven years ago in 1918 in a rent law crusade, he strongly urged and predicted exactly the kind of housing program that Gov. Alfred E. Smith is now supporting. The Evening World's housing program of that date recommended that "public money do what private capital fails to do in providing homes for the poor." Then such a suggestion was considered Socialistic.

Another campaign which was Mr. Pollard's own brainchild brought down taxi prices in New York and made this transit business city controlled and well-regulated. It was he, also, who first suggested that a law be passed making it possible for the public to pay their federal income taxes in four instalments instead of in one lump sum, as originally intended.

One unique editorial suggestion that came from his pen grew out of the celebrated Eno will contest. Mr. Pollard then suggested, and since has seen his thought become law, that wills be certified by the testator before he dies. An amendment is now on the statute books permitting a man to append a certificate as to his sanity to his will, when he draws it up.

Mr. Pollard is the product of the elder Pulitzer's secretarial school. From 1906 until Mr. Pulitzer died in 1911, he was one of his many secretaries, traveling with him all over the world.

"Wherever we went, great trunks filled with books went with us," Mr. Pollard has explained. "The mails were always heavy with bundles of clippings, newspapers, special reports from editors and business managers. Telegraph and cable offices worked overtime. To get through this huge mass of reading required relays of secretaries trained to select and condense. 'Give me only the point—the pith' was the blind man's constant cry, and he had an unerring instinct for plucking out this pith and throwing the rest away. Devouring a 300-page novel, carefully prepared of course, in an hour and a half, was his idea of complete relaxation."

It was in this business of extracting the "point and the pith" that Mr. Pollard obtained his best training as a writer of editorials. Prior to his association with Mr. Pulitzer and following graduation from Harvard with the class of 1902, Mr. Pollard spent a short period as special writer for the Boston Transcript. He came to New York in 1905 and joined the staff of the New York Times. After a few months as a reporter, he was made assistant dramatic editor, retaining this position until his connection with Mr. Pulitzer.

As a model in his conduct of the Evening World's editorial page, Mr. Pollard keeps the elder Pulitzer constantly in mind. Of him he once declared in an address at Columbia University:

"Closest to his heart, claiming always the best of his mental effort was the editorial page of the New York World. He was never too far away to keep in touch with it. . . . To the writing of an editorial he gave the most intense concentration in his desire that each word should be absolutely just and fair. . . .

"The paintaking effort that went into that task has never been better described than by Ralph Pulitzer in a speech at the celebration, May 10, 1908, of the 25th anniversary of the ownership of the World by Joseph Pulitzer—the latter then ill in Europe.

"'I have in my mind's eye,' Ralph Pulitzer then said, 'of a man in the throes of sightlessness and suffering insisting on a paragraph or phrase being read and reread to him over and over again, listening with painful tension to catch and correct any slightest suspicion of misstatement in a fact, any slightest shade of over-emphasis in an adjective, any possibility of conveying an impression that was not altogether accurate and scrupulously just.'"

GROCERS WON SUNDAY CLOSING LAW THROUGH NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING

Joint Campaign in Oakland, Cal., Won City Council Vote Over Chain Store Opposition—Evening Closing Hour Set at 7 P. M.

By HAMMOND EDWARD FRANKLIN

THE slavery of long hours was ended recently for grocers in and near Oakland, Cal., by a unique joint newspaper advertising campaign which put through a municipal ordinance which went into effect Jan. 1.

A survey of all grocers of the city showed that of 832 independent stores, 81 per cent were forced to keep open at night. Ninety-one per cent of these agreed they wished to close at night and on Sundays, but could not do so because a small minority always objected.

The following information was shown by this survey:

	Ind.	Chain	Total
Stores	832	131	963
Open Sundays	625	70	695
Open holidays	470	70	540
Favor closing nights and Sundays	757	61	818
Opposed to closing nights and Sundays	75	70	145

Ordinary Sunday closing ordinances had been tried but held illegal. It was evident that public sentiment must be aroused tangibly. The American Ideals and Health League was formed with the Retail Grocers' Association as its backbone, with three chain store systems, jobbers, milk dealers, independent citizens, etc., in it. A public meeting with a disinterested, public-spirited citizen, H. C. Capwell, head of Capwell's Department Store, as chairman was held.

It was decided to conduct an advertising campaign to ask the conditions be changed. Two days later the copy began to appear.

The first piece of copy bore the striking headline, "Human slavery returns." It pointed out the unfairness of the hours and urged that the conditon be changed forever. Copies of this were mailed to nearly all the grocers who promptly posted it.

The slogan, "Do your shopping in the daytime," was a feature of the series, with the result that such trade began to decrease.

A straw vote was taken by sending a return stamped postal to 1,000 names at random from the telephone book. Of 238 postals returned, only nine were opposed to the closing, after the advertising had been running twice a week for six weeks.

More than 2,000 people were interviewed personally, going on record nine to one as favoring the change. The situation was taken up with 85 parent-teacher and other organizations which gave their aproval.

It became evident to those pushing the campaign that the way to solve the problem was to use this education to get the City Council to pass a sanitary ordinance providing for adequate inspection of food supplies, for sufficient inspectors, for funds to pay such inspectors furnished by the grocers, for the hours to be set for inspection from 7 a. m. to 6 p. m. with the proviso the stores could be open only inspection hours, and no inspection on Sundays.

Stickers for automobiles were put on a great many cars while the campaign was on.

The campaign had been going eight weeks. Then a chain system with 70 stores in Oakland took it into its hands to try to stifle the movement opposing the ordinance. It used newspaper advertising and placed printed petitions in its stores, but 24 hours later, such was public sentiment which had been aroused, the petitions had to be withdrawn.

When the date was set for presentation of the ordinance to the City Council the grocers were sent buttons and told to be on hand. Many hundred were present at eleven o'clock when the City Council filed into its seats. Mayor Davie created much interest by coming in with his "Do your shopping in the day-time" button on.

Ten representatives of various organizations gave two-minute talks in favor of the ordinance after it had been presented to the Council by the Commissioner of Public Health and Safety. The one opponent was the owner of a chain of stores. The ordinance was passed for first and second reading.

The third and final reading came eight days later with but two opponents, a chain store operator and a Seventh Day Adventist group. The ordinance was passed without dissent and went into effect the first of this year.

Although energetic personal work helped, the background for the success of this plan was established by co-operative newspaper advertising of the broadest sort which reached all citizens, including the city officials, and which generated far more action than news stories alone could have. It represents a little venture of newspaper advertising into sociology with encouraging results.

Chester S. Lord Marries

Chester S. Lord, for 30 years managing editor of the New York Sun, where he was known as "Boss," was married Jan. 30 to Mrs. Elizabeth Brown Riggs, of Brooklyn. His two sons by a former marriage, Kenneth Lord and Richard S. Lord, witnessed the ceremony. Mr. Lord is at present Chancellor of the University of the State of New York. ADVERTISER THREATENS SCOLDING TO EDITORS WHO DON'T "COME THROUGH"

CLEVELAND AUTOMOBILE COMPANY

CABLE ADDRESS "CLEVAUTO" NEW YORK CODES BENTLEYS LIEBERS WESTERN UNION A. B. C. 5TH EDITION REVISED

GENERAL OFFICES AND FACTORY

CLEVELAND, OHIO, U.S.A.

January 26, 1926.

Gentlemen:

With the new year it is only natural for manufacturers to look back over the year just passed to determine points to the betterment of their business.

With reference to newspaper advertising, we have been checking up our records in regard to the amount of business which we have done with your newspaper and the amount of co-operation we have received from you in the insertion of news items on the Cleveland Six which have been sent to you.

We frankly believe that there is room for improvement and we wnat to take this opportunity to assure you that during the new year we will look forward to full co-operation from you in this regard. We maintain a definite record here at the factory and are supplied with clippings of our news items from a national clipping service, consequently we expect to make a complete check of this publicity.

We trust we will have no need in the future to advise you that you have neglected to come through with your co-opeartion in this respect.

Very truly yours,

CLEVELAND AUTOMOBILE COMPANY

SB:BD

Vice President.

THIS is the way an advertiser talks to a newspaper publisher when he gets an idea that free publicity is something which legitimately goes with an advertising contract. The above is a facsimile of a circular letter which was distributed late in January among newspaper publishers that have handled the Cleveland Automobile Company's account. Several publishers have sent this letter in to EDITOR & PUBLISHER as a classic distinction of the word "co-operation." Our readers will be struck by the concluding paragraph of Vice-President Black's little preachment. He trusts that he will have no further need to scold newspaper publishers for their failure to give him as much free advertising in 1926 as he feels he has a right to expect.

He wants all publishers to know that he is keeping check on their gratuities and if the little pile doesn't measure up to this gentleman's expectation—well, he doesn't say just what he will do but it is to be hoped that he will not do anything so stupid as to withdraw his space advertising from newspapers and thereby cut off his line of communication to the general reading and car buying public.

Newspaper publishers in general have only themselves to thank for such exhibits as the above. So long as advertising space is given away just so long will the old rule be demonstrated, that nothing is so contemptible as that which comes easily.

PUBLISHERS SUPPORT A. R. ERSKINE'S STAND

President of Studebaker Corporation Receives Many Letters Backing His Denouncement of Free Publicity System—Excerpts Made Public by Cleary, Advertising Director

J. M. CLEARY, director of advertising and sales research, of the Studebaker Corporation of America, South Bend, this week furnished EDITOR & PUBLISHER with quotations from letters from newspaper men received by A. R. Erskine, Studebaker president, following his stand against free publicity published in these columns, Nov. 21. His ideas were also sent in letter form to newspaper publishers.

"Mr. Erskine received letters from several hundred newspaper owners and editors," Mr. Cleary said. "Only two took exception to his statements."

Mr. Erskine placed the blame for the publicity evil on the doorstep of the newspaper editors, declaring that the automotive trade had no more right to expect free space than the local department stores. However, if free space is given, he emphasized that it should be accorded in proportion to the amount of paid space taken by the various advertisers. He maintained free publicity has been instrumental in increasing the rates for automobile advertising.

The quotations from publishers, as arranged by Mr. Cleary, follow:

"I think you are right in your version of the fact that free publicity has been instrumental in increasing the rates for automobile advertising. A newspaper publisher has only two commodities to sell—advertising and circulation. Anything that increases the cost of this production naturally tends to increase the rates of compensation which is necessary to enable us to operate the paper at a profit."

"I am in full accord with the sentiment conveyed in your letter to me of Nov. 13, and, as a publisher, I admire your frankness and commend your position that The Studebaker Corporation should receive the same consideration in the matter of publicity as the newspapers accord other automobile manufacturers.

"As you know, the nature of newspaper publishing is highly competitive, and I greatly fear that the willingness of newspapers not entitled to patronage by automobile manufacturers to give publicity, coupled with the activity of the local dealers, will prevent the attainment of what appears to me the ideal set up in your letter."

"I quite agree with you that newspapers should discontinue the plan of giving space for this character of publicity and attempting to offset it by adding to the regular advertising rate, a few cents more for regular automobile advertising."

"Some of the newspapers do go to extremes in refusing business publicity. We try to use a little common sense. If it is of news to the world to tell that some muscular gentleman is preparing to contest with another 'troglodyte' on some night next week at a price of $2.50 for each attendant who witnesses the scuffle, certainly it is news to tell about the progress made in the automobile industry, or some new adventure connected therewith, or some change in prospect, or even to describe a new make of car."

"Your views on the "free publicity" evil are so sound and so fair that it is refreshing indeed to read them. You need have no uneasiness that any other automotive advertiser will get more free space than you in proportion to money spent for space in the Coffeyville Journal, because neither you nor any other automotive manufacturer—nor, in fact, any other advertiser—is given any space."

"Until the recent discussions of this nature, the El Dorado Sunday News has half-heartedly edited the automobile section carrying the 'canned news' sent out by motor corporations and their agencies. The actual editing consisted of putting 'bunk' heads on these stories as they came out from publicity offices. Such news does not make interesting reading and we have found local merchants other than automobile dealers very unwilling to carry their ads in that section.

"While we have not definitely outlined our policy, it is planned to make a change effective Jan. 1, 1926, whereby all 'canned' motor publicity will be discontinued."

"I have your letter of the 13th relative to the much discussed 'free publicity.' I had never been in full sympathy with beating the tom toms about this nuisance, because when all's said and done, the editors are the arbiters of their own columns and the publicity agent, no matter how expert he may be, can hardly compel an editor to print matter which the editor does not want to print."

"Free publicity matter which the newspapers have contributed to the automobile industry have in my opinion been responsible largely for the tremendous development of that industry and also for the creation of a large part of the automobile advertising of today which is among the largest accounts in the country. We carry free publicity in this paper for the automobile dealers and manufacturers and we are entirely pleased with the results thereof."

"As you indicate, free publicity almost inevitably results in injustice to some and favoritism to other advertisers. That is one reason that all legitimate advertisers should be against it. It also tends to destroy public confidence in news columns, and puts an extra burden on the paper—that is one reason why newspapers should be against it."

"We admire very much your frank statement regarding 'free publicity' and we hope that some day the newspapers of the country in general will accept your view of the situation and take steps to correct the evil."

"During the past year we have curtailed the volume of publicity for automobiles and it is our hope to entirely eliminate this class of matter from the columns of our publication."

"It is practically impossible to give 'free publicity' fairly. The greedy who demand it as their right too often get the bulk of it while others perhaps more deserving but less insistent get little or none at all. Your attitude is peculiarly refreshing at a time when publicity seekers are at their zenith, both among advertisers and non-advertisers, and I want to thank you personally for your letter and the sound sentiments it contains."

"Automobile publicity is the only kind of free matter that we run and we have done this to boost the industry in this territory."

"I think you are entirely right in your attitude toward 'free publicity.' If I were an automobile manufacturer and as such, a national advertiser, I would insist on my full share of whatever free publicity were going the rounds of the press, and I would make a very determined fight to get it. Your attitude on free publicity in the automobile trade should commend itself favorably to every editor and publisher and I think you have outlined a fine conception of the ideal mission of the newspaper toward the trade."

"We agree that gossip of the automotive trade is no more entitled to space than gossip of the department stores, and the department stores tell us about it frequently, but as we have said before, we have been compelled to use it for some automotive accounts or lose business by it."

"We could raise our rates 10 cents an inch and give a great deal of reading matter with the ads, but we think it is more satisfactory to get down to bed-rock in advertising rates and throw in no premiums in the way of free readers to make the rate attractive."

"We have a rule to run a reader with each 30 inch ad, if requested."

"We have been giving a fixed percentage of free publicity in our automobile section and have been doing it without increasing our automobile display rate. However, there is one point that you have overlooked. The newspaper business like the automobile business is highly competitive. Automobile dealers in buying space continually play one paper against another in demanding free publicity. The natural result is that all papers yield more or less to these demands and they must cover the cost by higher rates for automobile advertising or saddle this additional cost upon other advertisers."

"We carry an automobile section each Sunday and try to select from among the mass of automobile publicity the very best stories which come in. We do not run these items with any view of giving free publicity to automobile accessories or parts. We take the position that in publishing these stories we are passing on to the public information regarding any particular automobile in which they might be interested."

Voice Magazine Bars Puffery

Alfred Human, formerly managing editor of Musical America, has just brought out the first number of a new musical publication called Singing, claiming to be the only publication devoted to vocal music. The first number is replete with excellent features and is a handsome piece of art printing. One of the magazine's policies will interest newspaper men. The editor declares that there will be no "puffery" or press agentry in a field where the evil has long been rampant.

Three New A. N. P. A. Members

Three newspapers, the Lockport (N. Y.) Union Sun and Journal, Ellwood City (Pa.) Ledger, Minneapolis Star, have been elected to active membership in the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, L. B. Palmer, manager, announced this week.

Westfield Journal Suspended

The plant of the Westfield (Mass.) Journal has been dismantled and moved to Springfield. The paper suspended publication last Saturday, after more than two years as a daily. It was purchased by The Daily News Publishing Company of Springfield a short time ago, and it is understood that a weekly publication will be issued from Springfield.

Discontinues Mail Edition

The Springfield (Ill.) State Register has discontinued its "mail edition" printed early in the forenoon for rural and out-of-town subscribers and announced that hereafter all subscribers will receive the afternon edition.

ADDRESSES WANTED

PREDICTS EXHAUSTION OF CANADIAN PULPWOOD SUPPLY IN 30 YEARS

Now "Squandering Capital with Reckless Abandon" Craig Tells Pulp and Paper Association Meeting—Group Approves Embargo on Exports

AT the present rate of consumption and destruction without replacement, the pulpwood supply of Canada will be exhausted in 30 years, Roland D. Craig of the Forest Service, Ottawa, declared in in address before the annual meeting of the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association in Montreal, Jan. 27-29.

There was, he said, a total stand of the species ordinarily used for pulp of 1,418 million cords, but of this only about 630,000,000 cords was considered accessible. This amount would supply the present cut of 4,650,000 cords per annum for 135 years.

Unfortunately there were other factors, the speaker said. One hundred ninety-four million cords were poplar and jack pine, very little of which are now used in pulp mills in Canada. Fire took an annual toll of between five and six million cords. The equivalent of 4,500,000 cords were used for lumber and 3,000,000 cords for ties, mining timbers, fuel, etc. Total annual depletion was therefore around 20,000,00 cords, which meant exhaustion of supplies in 30 years. This was too short a rotation even for pulpwood.

"Up to the present," said Mr. Craig, "we have been living on our capital and squandering it with reckless abandon. I estimate that only 27 per cent of our original forest wealth is left. Thirteen per cent has ben cut for use and 60 per cent destroyed, chiefly by fire, but in part to make way for agriculture."

The retiring president of the Association, F. W. Clarke, also sounded a note of alarm. He declared that much had been done during the past year to emphasize the importance of the situation and to attract to it the serious consideration of the Canadian people, but the question of the particular policy to be adopted was still a matter of diversified opinion. He believed that a way should and would be found to harmonize the views of the Association members on the embargo question so that a united stand could be taken among them.

"It is to be hoped," he added, "that this may be achieved without entailing a misunderstanding with our fellow industrialists outside of Canada. Perhaps it would not be out of place for me to suggest that so far from being actuated by selfish motives with the purpose of monopolizing the newsprint industry to the detriment of the American consumer, and the embarrassment of our foreign competitors, as has been alleged, we are merely seeking a means of assuring a continuance of supply of our raw materials at a reasonable price. Unless this can be accomplished it is quite certain that before many years the cost of pulpwood will be very much enhanced and the price of newsprint with it.

"Quite frankly, I am at a loss to understand the attitude of our friends across the border toward this very important question. It is difficult to realize what would have happened had the United States not been able to draw on Canada's pulpwood resources when their own had reached the point of exhaustion."

The consumption of wood has been further increased because of its growing use in the manufacture of artificial silks and woolens, the speaker said. He concluded his remarks by asserting that the Government should tax lumber going abroad and use the money obtained to further forest protection and for fresh propogation for the ultimate benefit of the consumer.

"It seems to me," he said, "that the publishers of both Canada and the United States ought to be just as much interested in selling this idea to their public as are we of the pulp and paper industry of Canada."

Two resolutions on the pulpwood situation were before the convention, one calling for a reaffirmation of the resolution adopted last year calling for an export duty on all pulpwood shipped from Canada, the other to make it compulsory to manufacture in Canada all wood cut off federal and provincial lands. (At present export is prohibited only in the case of wood cut on crown lands licensed for timber purposes). After considerable discussion this second resolution was withdrawn, the Association standing by its last year's resolution, which read in part:

"Resolved, That until some more efficient means of control can be agreed upon as practical, an adequate export duty should be imposed upon all logs and pulpwood exported from Canada; that such duty should be imposed upon a graduated basis, increasing annually, so as to permit the interests affected due opportunity for necessary adjustments; that the proceeds of such duty should be devoted as far as possible to the work of conservation and protection of our forests.

"That this association desires to give its assurance to the governments, federal and provincial, that it will extend its fullest co-operation to all necessary measures to provide an adequate market for farmers' and settlers' wood;

"That the continued study of this all-important question be urged upon the several authorities to the end that our forest resources be conserved as far as possible and ultimately utilized for the development of home industries."

New North Carolina News Bureau

The Durham News Bureau, Inc., has been granted a charter by North Carolina, and is now functioning. Capital stock is given at $5,000, $400 of which has been subscribed by R. L. Flowers, W. N. Keeper, Macon R. Dunnagan, formerly city editor, Charlotte Observer, and Southgate Jones, all of Durham.

Free Copies to Staff Banned

Free copies of daily papers for employees were discontinued by the Evansville Press, Evansville, Ind., Jan. 21. Two papers are furnished each department for files.

THEY GOT OUT AN EXTRA AND SOLD IT TOO

WILLIAM E. LOCKWOOD, city editor of the Fresno (Cal.) Bee and Jack R. Goddard of the Bee copy desk not only got out an "extra" recently, but they sold it for good measure.

The extra telling of the acquittal of 11 Fresno policemen and the conviction of one on charges of conspiracy in connection with the Federal Prohibition Law, was rushed to the composing room and soon the presses rumbled. But there were no newsies to take the copies to the street.

"Come on!" cried Lockwood to his aide, and each took a large bundle to the busiest street corner, where the papers rapidly disappeared.

Both men were given letters of appreciation and a bonus by Carlos K. McClatchy, editor of the Bee, for their enterprise.

A. P. MOVES TO COVER FEATURE STORIES

Systematized Human Interest Reporting Announced by McKernon, Eastern Superintendent—Editorial Changes —Woman Writer on Staff

Important changes in the New York news office of the Associated Press were announced this week by Edward McKernon eastern division superintendent.

Howard W. Blakeslee, for 10 years news editor of the central division, with headquarters in Chicago, has been transferred to New York, and succeeded in the middle west by C. K. Eastman, formerly his assistant. J. M. Kendrick, day editor in Atlanta, home office of the A. P. southern division, is now on the staff of the supplemental news service in New York.

Coincident with these editorial transfers, Mr. McKernon made public details of the A. P.'s re-organized feature news service in the East, requiring addition to the reportorial staff of B. B. Lyons, who will specialize in covering scientific news and features, and Ethel Halsey, who, a a writer of women's features, has th honor of being the first woman reporte ever regularly attached to the A. P. Nev York headquarters.

Mr. McKernon described the featur news reorganization as an attempt t "systematize response to the demand o member editors for more human interes stories" in addition to the regular routin coverage of world news events.

"We have always carried human in terest stories, for which there has bee a constant demand", he explained. "Th average human interest story hasn't muc substance. We believe, however, tha there are many feature stories which ar really worthwhile as news. We formerly sent out such stories indiscriminately, bu now we are systematizing our featur service. We began by setting Tuesday and Thursdays as 'fixed' feature days, an now we are sending out special featur stories every day."

The A. P. wire capacity has increased he pointed out. Double circuits have been established in the east, and new printer machines are keyed to higher spee than ever before, creating possibilities fo bigger news outlet. Wires open at 7 o'clock in the morning, and there is a hour during which little spontaneous news breaks. Formerly this hour was used t move re-writes of morning newspapers while now feature stories prepared beforehand on assignment are being put on the wires.

"Our volume is now big enough and we are stressing selectivity in our efforts to assist member editors in making up their papers," Mr. McKernon continued.

"There is so much real feature news lying around ready to be picked up, that we are endeavoring to make these additional stories not only entertaining, but worthwhile reading."

As instance of the policy behind the feature news expansion, he told how Lyons, a scientific student, had been engaged to specialize on scientific stories in the same manner that reporters previously were specializing on labor, politics, or financial news. A recent story he reported was the World Cancer conference in Baltimore.

"In reporting medical news", Mr. McKernon said, "with our circulation of 60,000,000 we cannot afford to raise false hopes by sending out stories of cures which prove later to be unfounded. In training a man to specialize on scientific subjects, a man who can talk intelligently to doctors, astronomers, inventors and the like, and at the same time can write in language undertandable to the layman, we hope to avoid bunk and furnish entertaining and authoritive stories.

"There is nothing sensational in engaging a woman reporter. We do not intend to exploit her sex. Her stories go out unsigned as do those of all A. P. men. 'Sob-sister' copy is taboo. Miss Halsey will not take part in any stunts or do any rough and tumble reporting. She will do no work that a man can do just as well."

A story written by Miss Halsey and given good play in New York newspapers was an interview with Mrs. Carl Akeley, wife of the big game hunter, who left with her husband last Saturday on an expedition into Africa. Mr. McKernon said she has also written a color story on the opera, and may later be used to describe Fifth avenue's Easter parade, and similar stories.

Miss Halsey, before joining the A. P., had three years experience on the New Orleans Item, and was associated for a while on the Paris Herald. Paris edition of the New York Herald Tribune.

The New York reportorial staff of the A. P., exclusive of editors and wire filers, now number 16 on both day and night shifts.

CONDUCTING A COMMUNITY NEWSPAPER CHAIN

Local Autonomy Must Be Maintained to Insure Success, Declares E. W. Booth, Editorial Director, Booth Newspapers—Constructive Crusades Build Prestige

OME pertinent theories on the con- duct of a community newspaper chain re advanced this week by Edmund W. ooth, editor of the Grand Rapids Press, d editorial director of the Booth News- pers of Michigan, a string made up of Ann Arbor Times-News, the Bay City mes-Tribune, the Flint Journal, the and Rapids Press, the Jackson Citizen- triot, the Kalamazoo Gazette, the uskegon Chonicle, and the Saginaw ws-Courier.

Ralph H. Booth, a brother, is president the group and to him the editorial ector credits the genius of organiza- n.

"His method of administration," he plained, "has been to hold a fairly se rein to the unit newspapers, giv- the local managers the fullest local hority feasible, and it has been this thod that has resulted in preserving husiastic loyalty and local initiative.

When asked to discuss chain newspa- ownership in all its phases, Mr. oth began by quoting a line from rtrand Russell, "Combinations take the t out of life."

If," he explained, "workers are made feel that they are more cogs in a com- ated, monotonous and dismal mechan- , they will soon lose heart and desire freer atmosphere for service.

There are advantages in the com- ation method for holding and pub- ing newspapers, and at the same time re are drawbacks, weaknesses and gers. Among the latter are the dan- s of weakening the local sense of re- nsibility.

Newspapers are best builded by being arded as trusteeships from the public as being treated by owners and man- rs as semi-public institutions. A fine spaper statesmanship will exercise at tact. The public aspects of the spaper, without which the paper t lose its soul and its chief oppor- ty for service, are inseparably re- d to growth in circulation and the ding up of goodwill. If these aspects ignored or neglected the public will lose interest and confidence.

Keeping this in mind, we believe that newspaper of a chain built from the dpoint of local autonomy and local leadership, other things being equal, be a much more stable and success- property than the newspaper of a n which is built from the top down, plied with canned editorials, and with rein of direction held tightly in the orate office.

f you make a study of really suc- ful individual newspapers of a chain, will find their success is due to the they are tied in a close and intimate as institutions to the city where they are published.

The type of newspaper the Booth p has developed may be termed the nunity newspaper, for in seven cities Booth paper is the only local daily, in the eighth it dominates the field. type of paper calls for close local rship and the management needs to nbued with a warm local spirit and hand-in-hand with the citizens to a better and bigger city.

ll of our managers own stock in roperty, and thereby have themselves nterest of owners.

hey have at their disposal the ad- ges of a big organization, with the bility afforded of many minds work- ogether and educating each other. brief, in order to maintain initia- nd the necessary enthusiasm on the f the local management, there needs delegated to each local manager ge a degree of authority as his ex- ce and ability will warrant. Local gers should be given to understand so long as they exercise sound ent, and so long as they meet with s in their all-round job as man- their hands will be upheld by rporate powers that represent the olders.

Edmund W. Booth, editorial director of the Booth newspapers.

"The best results in local management will usually be attained even in the smallest fields, by having a local manager of sufficient personality, of experience and training genuinely to represent the paper before the public and to be able to do so with intelligence and dignity. To get the best out of these properties, to cause them to grow and to be increasingly dominant and profitable as well, the management needs to be such that local pride and ambition are preserved, and, to this end, healthy rivalries and a large degree of autonomous spirit must be encouraged.

"A manager big enough to be the coordinating head of all departments is the kind most desired, such a manager being able to stand apart and do real thinking for the paper, being able to make fair and helpful criticisms to the under-managers, stimulating all to make the very best possible daily product. The publisher-manager, I believe, is the ideal type.

"The corporate heads of the properties and those that serve in matters of general direction will, as a rule, bring out the best in the properties by giving tactful encouragement from time to time to local managers, by fostering exchange of ideas, by encouraging frequent conferences, the head office leadership thus being in the nature of coach of the crew.

"One of the great advantages of the group method of newspaper publishing is in being able to bring to bear at weak points the strength of all. The most helpful and stimulating method is that of co-operative meetings. The Booth papers continually hold such meetings, bringing together editors, circulation managers, and advertising managers.

"The newspaper worker from time to time needs a touch of inspiration. It is so easy to get into a rut. By these co-operative meetings our men are continually inspired to new ideas.

"For instance, at our latest editorial meeting, we decided to take up the 'Lakes to Gulf Waterway' as a combination effort, and are now running a series of articles on the subject in all eight newspapers. The series was written by Arthur W. Stace, after a careful study of the entire question.

"Another advantage of these meetings may be seen in the handling of syndicate features. With eight representatives of that many newspapers seated about the table sorting out features and discussing them, we are able, we believe, to arrive at a combined judgment, far more valuable than individual judgment. At every meeting we throw away the chaff among syndicate features, and take on new."

Crusades, Mr. Booth believes, must be carried on by newspapers in order to build and maintain prestige.

"It has seemed to me," he said, "that if newspapers imbued with the crusading spirit would take the larger view of overcoming evil with good, instead of just exposing the evil, they would create fewer enemies and build more substantial properties. Though the promoting of constructive reforms for a community lacks high dramatic interest, in the long run such procedure builds prestige and good will."

The Grand Rapids Press from the very start has been a great stunt paper. Its fame is country-wide among newspaper men for the welfare work it accomplishes among its newsboys. It is constantly conducting campaigns for civic improvements. At present, working closely with the Grand Rapids smoke inspector, a crusade is underway against the local smoke nuisance. At every opportunity, trophies are offered by the Press, such as prizes recently offered to the speediest fire company. During the last general political campaign, prizes were offered for the best essays on how to get out the vote.

Mr. Booth declared it was his belief that absolute political independence was a prerequisite for the successful conduct of a newspaper chain.

"Thus it was," he said, "that when my brother Ralph Booth was asked to accept from the Governor of Michigan a United States Senatorship, he declined. To accept would have been contrary to the Booth standard of newspaper ethics. The moment a publisher steps into political office, the public is given the impression that the hands of his newspaper or newspapers are tied, and that all news is likely to be colored in the interest of the publishers particular interest or party. Complete separation and freedom from public office and party interest, we believe is essential to the fair and surressful operation of a newspaper chain."

At this point, Mr. Booth was asked to define his standard of newspaper ethics.

"The two essential postulates in a newspaper creed are freedom and fairness," he replied. "The former applies firstly to freedom from within. All editors must keep themselves free from any entanglements, tending to hamper the free expression of their opinions. Fairness includes the necessity of seeing both sides of every question and always giving a man his day in the newspaper court."

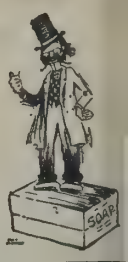
Mr. Booth, the subject of this interview, started working in the Detroit National Bank, when he was 15 years old. At 22, he left to become financial and boys' secretary in the Detroit Y. M. C. A. Subsequently he moved to Albany to take up the same sort of work there, later becoming promoting general secretary of the New York City Y. M. C. A.

After 15 years of Y. M. C. A. work, he turned to newspaper publishing. In 1913, he became publisher of the Grand Rapids Press, which his brother George, had established previously.

Discussing the question of newspaper successes, Mr. Booth concluded that "applying the sharp tests to solid newspaper success, I am prepared to assert that nowhere is the sensational, melodramatic, sex-magnifying type of newspaper as successful, taking in all the facts, as is the serious-minded, public-serving, constructive newspaper; that is, where the latter type is promoted with sound business judgment and with enterprise.

"And further," said Mr. Booth, "the constructive, serious-minded newspaper, the type that gives editorial civic leadership in its field and having its roots deep down in the community and bearing all the fruits of genuine success, will often be found not in the great metropolis, but in the modest-sized cities of America. The great city in America has properly been called the storm center and the newspapers in these fields have many brilliant and able qualities, but because the big metropolis lacks community soul and community interest, no metropolitan newspaper can be said to give civic leadership in such fields as is actually done by many newspapers in smaller cities where the community sense and spirit are strong and where the newspaper is looked to for leadership in all that makes for better civic life.

"The intelligent politician of national standing and influence knows that the small towns and cities are the bone and sinew of America, that as goes the small city and the country districts, so goes the nation."



TRAIL BLAZERS OF ADVERTISING

Street Fakers—Masters of Gab

Chapter XXV

Street Fakers—Masters of Gab

THE original soap-box orators were the street fakers selling goods—"just to advertise them." Their schemes for introducing something new were as novel as they were mysterious.

These gifted gents of the street-corner marts were real, dyed-in-the-wool advertising adventurers.

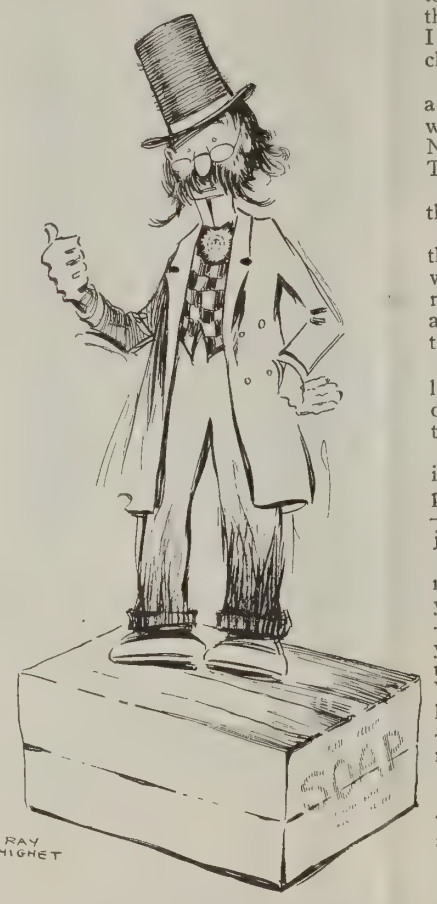
They flourished back in the days of the generous use of pills and plasters when fountain pens were a novelty; when electric belts, razors, corn plasters and pills for all ills and ailments were peddled at bargain prices, or given away almost free, just to advertise them to the public.

They operated most successfully in the days of the old-time hokum in advertising. The people on the street who bought the street faker's wares were fooled by the mysterious word-advertising. Anything of unknown merit could be introduced to the public under the excuse of advertising.

Naturally advertising got a bad name. It meant a fake, fraud, or worthless articles palmed off on the innocent public. Street fakers were clever barkers, ballyhoos, salesmen and advertising men all combined into one trick machine. They were chaps with a wide knowledge of human nature. Their success depended on picking out the weakest spots in the human make-up and playing upon them as a musician does upon his favorite instrument.

They had to make their audience believe they were getting something for almost nothing, or at least a genuine bargain. Well do I remember the street faker selling a new fountain pen "just to introduce them to the public." He would pick up ten boxes and into one would insert a five dollar bill or gold piece, mix them all up so no one knew which contained the five spot. Then he would sell the ten like hot cakes at one dollar per. By giving the five dollar bill or coin he lost fifty cents on each box and then made a profit.

His stunt sold pens by the tens of dozens at fifty cents. Gambling for that five dollars cost the spectators a lot of coin which enriched the faker.



I knew one of the old timers who was a clever performer with a book of card tricks which at the same time advertised a line of magic tricks. He cashed in on both ends, selling the book and being paid to distribute a catalog of merchandise for sale by a mail order house.

He collected his crowd by entertaining with a card trick. He had a dozen or so good tricks. He would perform several without saying a word. He mystified the gathering crowd. When it was large enough he would say, "folks, friends and brothers of my lodge; I am not out here doing this stunt for the benefit of my health. I belong to that great profession of advertising men. I have nothing to sell you; so don't move away until you get my story. It's all free, friends; all free.

"I have shown you three of the cleverest card tricks ever known. I have one more yet to show you. It has all the others skinned to death. You would give a great deal, friends, to be clever enough to do these tricks, wouldn't you? Well, you can do them. See how simple they are. I will do it slowly so you can see how it is done.

"I am showing you these tricks to prove that you can do them as well as I can, also to get your attention and make you camp here awhile. The good things come last.

"Remember it is not costing you a single thing to see how I do these tricks. And no wise man will ever pass up a free proposition. Now, you will all be interested in the next trick because you know I would never show my best tricks first. I have saved it until the last because you can't afford to miss it.

The street barker in all his glory as pictured by Ray Highet

"But before I show you that wonderful trick." he would continue, "I am going to tell you about this valuable little book of card tricks which I am going to pass out to you. Now, I just want you to hold it in your hand. Turn to page ten and you will see it tells you how to do this wonderful trick. The other pages tell you about hundreds of others.

"To advertise this wonderful book you can get it tonight for one half the original price of one dollar."

Then this old time street orator worked fast to collect the half dollars from those with the books in their hands.

He performed the favorite card trick all the time talking, and the books sold like circus lemonade on a hot day.

The free entertainment was always a part of the street-corner worker's stunt. His scheme was to sandwich his selling talk between his entertainment.

A fellow with a gift of gab can sell anything, and the street faker was the master of gab.

I once knew a street faker who was clever at making people buy what they did not want.

He usually carried a suit case of cheap, shiny jewelry. His kind of salesmanship was a fine art. He had a personality and a line of talk that made people hand over money for the stuff they had no thought of buying, and things which they would probably never use.

His gab was something like this:—

"I'll tell you honestly folks, I'm not out here to make money: just to advertise a new article, and I give you free—absolutely free—something you can't buy for love or money. I've got to advertise it and get it on the market."

All the time he was talking he shuffled a soiled deck of cards.

"Now friends, step up close. I'm going to perform a card trick which Herman the Great could not do in half an hour. I can do it in five minutes—watch me closely.

"Will some man in the audience draw a card? Ah, thank you, sir. Now see what it is. You see I place it here. Now, two other gentlemen draw a card. Thanks gents."

Two others drew cards and he shuffled them into the deck.

"Now, friends, I am going to perform this trick in five minutes. I'll tell you what cards were taken. I lay the cards right here—remember Keller took half an hour, in just five minutes I'll perform the trick."

Then instead of doing the trick and letting his audience go, he laid down the deck and was selling his wares before they could get their attention away.

"Before I do the trick, friends, I'm going to show you the reddest, hottest proposition in Chicago. See this stick-pin—it isn't any foil behind it, it's a cut stone, just like a diamond.

"Now I'll be perfectly honest with you men, it's not a diamond. Take it in your hands, friends, examine it carefully—don't be scared, fellow, it won't bite you. It looks like a real gem, hold it under your coat, it shines like a diamond. Well, you want a diamond for its brilliancy—then isn't this the stone for you—it's just as much good to you as the real goods. What?"

Well, isn't it, you begin to think.

"I took one of these stones to one of the leading jewelers in Chicago, men, and he told me that there is not a professional in the city who can tell one of my genuine imitation Las Vegas diamonds from the real goods. He asked me not to mention his name, and I ain't going to; it 'ud hurt his business."

The crowd was drinking in every word as though he were solving the political problem of the United States.

"Now, men, my proposition," he went on in his tireless sing-song voice. "Here's the genuine imitation Las Vegas diamond; here's one of my guaranteed watch chains; here's a charm to go with the chain, men; and here's a pair of my rolled gold cuff links, and here's my little gold collar button. But that ain't all, men. Look here!" and he dangled that glittering bunch of jewelry in one hand and picked through his stock with his other. Finally he found what he wanted, "and here, men, is one of my opal wedding rings that I will fit to your finger or to any lady's finger. Now, men, I sell you the diamond pin just to advertise them and give you all the rest."

Still tantalizing them with the jewelry, he next took five silver dollars from his pocket and slapped them down on the suit case.

"That $5 belongs to any man who can go to a store in Chicago and get a diamond this size for less than $100. You know you can't!" He shouted it so emphatically that they really knew they couldn't.

"What do I ask for it? Five dollars? No! Four fifty? No! Not four—three fifty—three—two fifty—two—one fifty? No! Give me just one dollar for the diamond and I'll throw in all the rest—look at them, men, before you buy. Examine them carefully! Spill a dollar and they are yours to take home."

ANTINOE PICTURE SENT BY CABLE TO U. S.

News Photo Feat Accomplished by P. & A., Using Bartlane Process—N. Y. News Published Picture Feb. 1—Originals to Arrive Feb. 8

Cable wires were used successfully this week to flash to this country a picture of the foundering S. S. Antinoe, taken from the deck of the S. S. President Roosevelt. The feat was accomplished by Pacific & Atlantic Photos, Inc., New York, using the Bartlane process.

The picture, reproduced untouched on this page, was obtained from a passenger on the rescue ship at Plymouth, England, Jan. 31, and was rushed by airplane to London, where, via the Bartlane process, it was transformed into cable tape. This tape was transmitted over Western Union cables the same night, being received in New York about midnight.

FLORIDA PAPERS SOLD

A. H. Chapman former assistant business manager of the Columbus Ledger, has been transferred to Bradentown as general manager of the two papers.

The Herald and Journal were formerly published by the Bradentown Publishing Company with R. P. Sponenbarger as president and R. W. Bentley as secretary and treasurer.

Full associated press service has been added to the Herald and typographical changes effected. NEA service is also used. Additional machinery will be installed. A 24-page Hoe Press has been ordered and should be installed in the Journal Herald building before April 1, at which time the Herald will go to eight column 12 em size.

The Herald is a six-day afternooon paper, but the owners plan to make it a seven-day paper. The Journal is a weekly.

Bradentown is located on the West coast, 45 miles southwest of Tampa and about 30 miles northwest of St. Petersburg.

BRITISH ADVERTISERS UNITE

English Association Formally Launched at London Banquet

(By Cable to Editor & Publisher)

London, Feb. 4.—The British Advertising Association was formally launched last night at an inaugural banquet held at the Victoria Hotel. Lt. Col. Edward F. Lawson, of the London Telegraph, association chairman, presided. About 500 English advertising men attended.

Speakers included Sir William Berry, C. A. McCurdy, Col. Vernon Willey and Sir Charles Higham. Lord Birkenhead, who was to have been a speaker, was unable to attend due to illness.

Daily Bans Free Tickets

No complimentary tickets or passes to any theatre or playhouse charging admission may be received and used by employees of the Tacoma (Wash.) News-Tribune and Tacoma Daily Ledger, according to a ruling which went into effect shortly after the first of the year. Paid publicity work is banned as well.

New Kansas Daily

The Augusta (Kan.) Daily News has begun publication. James T. Jackson is publisher, Sadie A. Franklin, editor, and B. M. Morris, news editor.

When the Antinoe was foundering in a terrific sea, a picture was taken that appeared in a New York paper the day after the rescue ship landed in England. An English and American newspaper man invented the process, which mechanically translates a picture into dots and dashes and unscrambles the code in picture form after transmission. The above cut was made from an unretouched photograph.

NEW CLASSIFIED SERVICE

MacDonald Leaves Plain Dealer to Start Firm—Van Buren Succeeds Him

Harrison C. MacDonald, classified advertising manager of the Cleveland Plain Dealer for the past five years, resigned February 1 to establish his own company specializing in classified advertising promotion and service for newspapers, with offices in the Card Building, Cleveland.

H. C. MacDonald J. A. Van Buren

J. A. Van Buren has been chosen to succeed Mr. MacDonald. He has been in charge of the advertising of the department stores since 1923.

In the past five years Mr. MacDonald became known the country over as a successful builder of classified. MacDonald was especially well-known in the classified fraternity for his creation of business-building ideas one of which, the "Betty Brown" idea, in 1921 won for him the silver cup offered annually by the Association of Classified Managers for the most valuable idea presented each year at their convention. This idea has since been used by newspapers in many parts of the country.

Mr. MacDonald's period of service in the Plain Dealer covers in all eleven years during which time he served in the promotion, circulation and, just previous to becoming classified manager, in the display advertising department. Before leaving Mr. MacDonald was given a reception by executives of the Plain Dealer who presented him with a platinum watch. In addition to this gift he received a number of others from members of his own department.

Mr. Van Buren, a native of New Orleans, trained on the New Orleans Times-Picayune with which he was connected for 16 years before going to the Plain Dealer. He worked himself up from a classified advertising solicitor to business manager, holding also positions as assistant cashier, bookkeeper, display salesman and advertising manager.

3 OHIO PRESS GROUPS MEETING IN COLUMBUS

R. C. Snyder Reelected President of Associated Dailies During Newspaper Week—Buckeye Press and Select List Meet

(By Telegraph to Editor & Publisher)

Columbus, O., Feb. 3—This is Newspaper Week in Ohio. Three associations of newspaper men are meeting here in connection to a greater or less extent with the gathering of farmers at the State University.

The Select List of Ohio Dailies met Monday, the Associated Ohio Dailies Tuesday, and the Buckeye Press Association were to hold a two-day session Thursday and Friday.

At the 41st annual session of the Ohio Associated Dailies, George V. Sheridan, secretary of the Ohio Retail Merchants Association, declared that advertising by radio will never be successful because of the inaccuracies of the spoken word. He asserted that the retail merchant will never fail to use the newspaper, as all other forms of advertising are more or less fleeting and none gives the returns that the newspaper does. Editors, declared Sheridan, do not seem to realize that advertising is news.

State Auditor Joseph T. Tracy said that as a result of the passage of the Vorys Law, Ohio newspapers will receive only about one-half as much legal advertising as before. Tracy answered many questions and declared that he regarded legal advertising as a necessity. He announced that he would have the city financial reports published in the newspapers, as he believes that "Taxpayers are entitled to know about financial transactions involving their money."

Prof. Bristow Adams of Cornell University said that crime news is given only 4 per cent of the space in the newspapers, while many times that much is given to news about education, business and sports. He denied that newspapers are grossly inaccurate.

R. C. Snyder of the Norwalk (O.) Reflector-Herald was reelected president of the Associated Dailies.

Others on the program for the meeting were William F. Wiley, Cincinnati Enquirer; Lew Williams, Toledo News Bee; Harry Pence, Cincinnati Enquirer; Louis H. Brush, Salem News, and Paul Siddall, Alliance Review.

Thurman Miller, Wilmington News Journal, was toastmaster at a banquet Wednesday night, when the principal addresses were given by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Warren L. Rogers, diocese of Ohio, and Karl Bickel, president of the United Press.

COLUMBIA "U" ADDS TO JOURNALISM COURSE

Extension in Curriculum with View to Making It More Useful to Those Already in Newspaper Work Announced by Cunliffe

Important extension of the curriculum of the Pulitzer School of Journalism, Columbia University, New York, was announced this week by J. W. Cunliffe, director. Changes in the courses have been made, he said, with a view to making them more useful to men and women already engaged in newspaper work, and also to those who are already taking, or have taken, the two years' undergraduate professional work prescribed and who wish to pursue their studies in the more advanced courses."

"The undergraduate courses remain substantially the same except that the reporting and copy editing laboratory work is in future to be concentrated in one large course to be jointly conducted by Professors C. P. Cooper and Allen Sinclair Will. The literature course prescribed for the first year will be in modern European fiction and poetry, given by Prof. J. W. Cunliffe, with an alternative offered in international relations, by Prof. P. T. Moon, of the Department of Public Law. Students may also elect a course in the business of journalism, given by Prof. Willis of the School of Business, but this latter alternative will not be offered until 1927-8.

"Graduate courses offered include a seminar course to be conducted by the senior professors of the staff with a view to assisting candidates for the degree of M. S. in journalism in the investigation and presentation of a pournalistic study in an essay or article, which forms one of the requirements for this degree. Prof. W. B. Pitkin will give a course in the psychology of news and popular reading, which is open to all graduate students interested in the social and economic problems involved in contemporary newspapers, magazines, books, and motion pictures. These two courses are prescribed courses for the degree of M. S. in journalism.

"Elective courses include one in editorial problems and policies, by Prof. R. C. E. Brown, formerly of the New York Tribune, a course in literary criticism and book reviewing by Prof. Allen Sinclair Will, formerly of the New York Times, and a course in Sunday supplement work by W. P. Beazell, assistant managing editor of the New York World. There will also be a new course in department editing, which will deal with problems of organizing and managing departments in newspapers and magazines, with special attention to a few of the more important specialties such as sports, fashions, the arts, society, domestic science, hygiene, etc. Studies of current departments will be made, and considerable practice work assigned in the planning and writing of typical papers and sections.

"Other elective courses include one in dramatic criticism, which will provide training in the writing of critical reviews of dramatic productions of different types; one in industrial and trade journalism dealing with the relation of a business paper to the trade or industry it served, and giving practice in gathering news, interviewing, writing and editing articles; and one in scientific and technical journalism, which is in the nature of a continuation of the preceding course in industrial and trade journalism, the difference being that it has special reference to recent scientific discoveries and inventions, and their application to industrial and manufacturing processes.

"In order to provide these courses, new appointments will be made which are now under consideration by the academic and administrative authorities of the University, and will be announced later."

PAN PRESS MEET AIMS TO FOSTER BETTER INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

Director General Rowe Outlines Purposes of Washington Meeting Called for April 7-13—Ethics, Advertising, News Gathering Program Topics

By L. S. ROWE,
Director General, Pan American Union

OF the various conferences and congresses of a Pan American character that have been held, none is of greater significance than the First Pan American Congress of Journalists, which will assemble at Washington from April 7 to 13 next. It will mark the coming together for the first time in the history of the American Continent, of the journalists of the United States and Latin America for the purpose of exchanging views on questions of mutual interest.

The forthcoming Congress was provided for by resolution of the Fifth International Conference of American States, held at Santiago, Chile, in 1923. On motion of the delegation of the United States, the Conference unanimously decided to authorize the Governing Board of the Pan American Union to designate the city of the United States at which the Congress should convene, and the date on which the delegates should assemble. Accordingly, the Governing Board designated Washington as the place of meeting and through its Chairman, the Hon. Frank B. Kellogg, Secretary of State, fixed April 7 to 13 as the dates on which the Congress should be held.

The Pan American Congress of Journalists will not be official in the sense that delegates will be appointed by the Governments of the American Republics. Invitations have been extended to the directing heads of the principal daily newspapers of America in their individual capacity, or as representatives of the papers with which they are associated. It was the belief of the Santiago Conference that only in this way would it be possible to obtain the presence of those journalists actually directing the destinies of the press in the respective countries.

No single factor exercises a greater influence in moulding public opinion than the modern daily newspaper. It is the medium through which millions of readers keep abreast of developments throughout the world, and it is through the newspaper that there is developed that public opinion which to a greater or less degree determines the policy of governments with respect to international affairs. It is most essential, therefore, that facilities be established for the rapid transmission of news between the nations of the world, and that the news so transmitted be of a nature to accurately portray conditions as they actually exist.

Until comparatively recent years, means for the gathering and dissemination of news between the Republics of the American Continent were woefully inadequate. To the Latin American readers of newspapers the impression was conveyed through the dispatches from this country that we were purely a materialistic nation. On the other hand, news despatches from the republics to the south were usually confined to reports of political disturbances, with little or no attention paid to the economic or social progress of those nations.

Happily, with the extension to Latin America of the facilities of the several American press services, this condition has been materially improved. The larger and more important dailies of Latin America now receive detailed reports of developments in the United States. Similarly, the despatches from Latin America to the United States reveal in a more accurate manner the true conditions in those countries.

Much, however, yet remains to be done before there will be a proper appreciation of the political, social and economic progress of the American Republics on the part of the people of the respective countries. It is believed that the forthcoming Congress of Journalists will aid materially in this work. The leading journalists of all the American Republics will assemble at Washington, and the views exchanged and contacts formed should prove an important factor in the development of better relations between the countries of the Western Hemisphere.

The journalists from Latin America who will come to Washington in April will visit some of the leading cities of the United States, where opportunity will be offered them to become familiar with actual conditions in this country. In this way, and through attendance at the Congress, it is believed that they will be better able to interpret, on their return to their respective countries, the social, political and economic progress of the United States. On the other hand, it is believed that the interchange of views at Washington will enable the journalists of the United States to gain a better appreciation of the point of view of the people of Latin America.

The program of the conference follows:

I.

NEWSPAPER ETHICS

The influence of journalism on international relations and the internal affairs of nations, bearing in mind the necessity of reconciling the liberty of the press with the highest conception of the ethics of journalism.

II.

THE PRESS AND INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

The press as a medium of fostering closer relations between the American Republics.

a. Selection of news so as to give a clearer picture of the national life of the peoples of America.

b. Increasing space devoted to economic and financial development.

c. Increasing space devoted to cultural and artistic progress on the American Continent.

III.

GATHERING AND DISSEMINATION OF NEWS.

a. The cost of gathering and distributing news.

b. Transmission of news by cable, by wireless and by mail; rates, limitations, facilities, etc., of these various methods.

IV.

ADVERTISING

Consideration and study of questions relating to newspaper advertising. The distribution, interchange and influence of advertising on journalism.

V.

NEWSPAPER ORGANIZATION

The organization of newspapers in the American Republics.

a. Establishment of special departments of newspapers, such as, for instance, a section devoted to suggestions and explanations which the general public may have to make.

b. The use of illustrations in the presentation of news.

c. Special activities of newspapers (organization of lectures, social welfare work, legal and medical services, etc.)

VI.

SCHOOLS OF JOURNALISM

The education and preparation of journalists. Establishment of schools of journalism—their organization and function.

VII.

PRESS ASSOCIATION

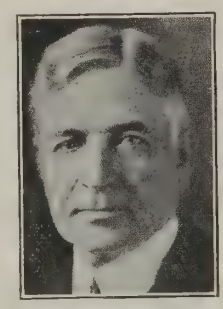
The organization of a Pan American Press Association.

Changes on Lorain (O.) Journal

Frank Maloy has been named editor of the Lorain (O.) Journal, succeeding James Shephard, resigned. Maloy was managing editor of the Journal for two years. Glen Shannon, formerly telegraph editor, Sandusky (O.) Register has been made news editor of the Journal.

Classified Staff Holds Banquet

Members of the classified advertising department, Los Angeles Examiner held their annual banquet at the Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles, recently. R. E. Seiler classified manager, made the principal address. He was presented with a silver cigarette case and leather bill fold by members of the department.



UNBIASED STATEMENTS

IT is Mr. Archibald A. Smith who feels certain, he says, that the bobbed-hair fad is waning; that five years from now bobbed heads will be as scarce as they were five years ago. Mr. Smith is a hairpin manufacturer. Another unprejudiced statement might be made by a mattress king, who ought to say that the era of night-clubs is about to end, and that people will spend a lot of time sleeping now. Or "Vegetarianism a Menace to Health, Says Armour."—F. P. A. in Conning Tower, New York World.

HAINES GIVES 1000 ACRES FOR PRESS HOME SITE

Editors from 47 States Witness Presentation—F. Lowden Named President, Ochs, Curtis, Capper, Vice-Presidents—To Raise $100,000,000

ORLANDO, Fla., Feb. 3.—Accredited delegates representing every state in the Union save one, today witnessed Mr. and Mrs. Charles D. Haines of Altamonte Springs, Fla., sign the legal papers transferring to the International Press Foundation Inc., 1,000 acres of land as the site for the home of newspaper men and women of the world. The property is conservatively estimated to be worth $1,000,000.

FRANK O. LOWDEN

Maj. Lew B. Brown, publisher of the St. Petersburg Independent was temporary chairman. H. L. Williamson, secretary of the Illinois Press Association served as secretary, taking up temporarily the work of D. W. Bowles who died suddenly in Jacksonville yesterday.

The organization committee reported a form of organization in harmony with charter and conforming to the laws of Florida after which the nominating committee reported the nomination of the following officers for the first year: Frank O. Lowden, stockholder in the Chicago Daily News, president; Adolph S. Ochs, publisher, New York Times, first vice-president; Cyrus H. K. Curtis, second vice-president; Arthur Capper of the Capper Publications, third vice-president; H. L. Williamson, Springfield, Ill., secretary, and Addison B. Calvin, Glen Falls, N. Y., treasurer. On motion the secretary cast the vote for all officers as the delegates stood. Charles D. Haines was elected honorary president.

It is proposed to raise $100,000,000 to carry out the plans of Mr. Haines for the home which will be created on the 1,000 acres of land between Orlando and Sanford where "Press City" is to be built. Nearly 90 newspaper men from all sections of the United States gathered at Jacksonville Monday for the tour of Florida which so far has included Jacksonville, Sanford, Winter Park, the site of the proposed home at Geneva, and Orlando. Tomorrow morning the party departs in automobiles for Kissimmee, Winter Haven, Lakeland, Tampa, St. Petersburg, Sarasota and thence to extreme Southern Florida cities. Entertainment has been lavish in all places visited.

The primary purpose of the convention was to accept the gift of Congressman Charles D. Haines and Mrs. Haines and to formulate the plans for carrying on the work of the Foundation.

The accredited delegates at the Press Foundation meeting are, in the most part, the presidents of the various state press associations. They are:

Alabama, J. C. McLendon; Arizona, Edward Harrington; Arkansas, Erwin Funk; California, Thomas DeWitt Warren; Colorado, John H. Green; Connecticut, O. S. Freeman; Delaware, Theodore Townsend.

Georgia, C. D. Rountree; Florida, Major Lew B. Brown; Idaho, Frank W. Brown; Illinois, Wm. J. Smith; Indiana, Herbert C. Willis; Iowa, K. F. Baldridge; Kansas, J. C. Donious; Kentucky, Keen Johnson; Louisiana, C. J. Michael; Maine, Charles F. Flynt.

Maryland, Ridgeley P. Melvin; Massachusetts, Gardner E. Campbell; Michigan, A. Van Koevering; Minnesota, John E. Casey; Mississippi, Clayton T. Rand; Missouri, E. H. Winter; Montana, H. O. Woare; Nebraska, J. G. Alden; New Hampshire, George D. Cummings.

Nevada, Harold P. Hale; New Jersey, P. A. Robertson; New Mexico, Don W. Lusk; New York, Wallace Odell; North Carolina, Josephus Daniels; North Dakota, W. P. Davies; Ohio, H. C. Dworshak; Oklahoma, Clyde E. Muchmore; Oregon, A. L. Mallery.

PROMOTING "MADE IN U. S. A."

Dayton Retailer to Discuss This Topic at N.R.D.G.A. Meet, New York

Under the general topic of "Planning a Store-Wide Sales Event," William T. White, of Rike, Kumler Company, Dayton, O., department store, will discuss specifically the subject of promoting "Made in U. S. A." merchandise, addressing the advertising group of the National Retail Dry Goods Association meeting in New York, Feb. 8-13.

Mr. White is scheduled to speak during the morning session, Feb. 10. He has had outstanding success with this promotion idea using newspaper advertising during the past year.

The association's advertising group meets Feb. 10 and 11, and will be addressed also by Herbert J. Tily, of Strawbridge & Clothier, Philadelphia, association president, on "Building Goodwill of a Retail Store."

Other group speakers include: Edgar J. Kaufmann, of Kaufmann's Pittsburgh department store, on "Selecting Merchandise for Advertising Purposes"; Myron Perley, of Floing Plumer, Inc., New York, on "Art as Applied to Department Store Advertising"; Thomas Ryan, of Pedlar & Ryan, Inc., New York advertising agency, on "Copy"; and A. E. McElfresh, of Lord & Taylor, New York, on "The Monthly Sales Calendar."

Direct mail advertising and its relation to other media, will be discussed by various speakers at the session Feb. 11.

Connecticut Sunday Papers Merged

The Bridgeport (Conn.) Herald and the Waterbury Herald, Sunday newspapers published from the same plant in Bridgeport under the editorship of Richard Howell have been merged under the name of the Bridgeport Herald. Both papers are owned by the estate of F. R. Swift. The Waterbury Herald was established in 1888 and the Bridgeport Herald in 1890.

Three Generations Publish Paper

Three generations of the Grist family have owned and edited the Yorkville (S. C.) Enquirer, semi-weekly newspaper which has just reached the 71st anniversary of its founding by the late Capt. Lewis M. Grist. He issued the first number of the newspaper under its present name on Jan. 4, 1855. This record of continuation by the sons and grandsons and grandaughters of the founder is believed to be without parallel in the United States.

Staff Organizes Benefit Group

Following a dinner recently given to E. H. Gauvreau, managing editor of the New York Evening Graphic, members of the editorial staff met and elected the following officers of a mutual benefit association: President, R. H. McNamara; vice-president, Harry Grogin; secretary, Miss Mary Lee Dutcher and treasurer, Ellis E. Reed.

SURVEY OF N. C. DAILIES SHOWS ONE PAPER FOR EVERY SIX PERSONS

Size of Staffs, Editorial and Reportorial Salaries, and Week-End Advertising Also Given by M. V. Atwood in Chapel Hill Address

AN informal survey of North Carolina daily newspapers showing number total circulation, size of staffs, salaries of editors and reporters, Friday advertising and other important classifications was presented by M. V. Atwood, managing editor of the Utica (N. Y.) Observer-Dispatch at the Newspaper Institute held at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, recently.

The survey was conducted by questionnaire to all dailies in the state, replies being received from 90 per cent, Mr. Atwood said.

His report follows:

North Carolina has a population of 2,559,123 and the circulation of the daily papers is in excess of 404,492; thus there is one daily newspaper for about six persons. Thirty-eight separate newspaper organizations publish ten morning papers, twenty-nine evening papers and ten Sunday papers. Seven of the Sunday papers are published by morning dailies and three are published by evening dailies. Twenty-nine of the papers have circulations under 10,000; five have circulations from 10,000 to 20,000; one has a circulation between 20,000 and 30,000, and five over 30,000.

Four papers said they average 6 pages, four 10 pages, three 8 pages, two 20 pages, one 22 pages, one 16 pages, one 15 pages, one 4 pages, one 27 pages, and one 14 pages daily.

Two papers reported 13 linecasting machines, two reported 12, two reported 9, one reported 8, two reported 7, two reported 5, three reported 4, five reported 3, and two reported 2.

Two papers reported editorial and news staff of 14, one reported 12, two reported 7, two reported 6, two reported 5, five reported 3, and four reported 2.

There seems to be a correlation between the size of staff and the number of linecasting machines; the number on the staff is about the same as the number of machines.

The staffs are divided as to inside, or desk men and reporters in the proportion of 2.6 to 3.

Of the morning papers, on one paper the desk men report 6 p. m., reporters 3 p. m.; on one desk men 3:30 p. m., reporters 2 p. m.; on one desk men 6 p. m. reporters 11 a. m.; on one desk men 5 p. m., reporters 2 p. m.; on one both report 3 p. m., and on one desk men 3:30 to 4 p. m., and reporters 2:30 p. m.

On the evening papers, two report desk men and reporters as beginning work at 7:30 a. m.; six at 8 a. m.; three at 8:30 a. m.; one at 7:45 a. m.; one desk men at 8 and reporters at 7:45 a. m.; three desk men at 8 and reporters at 8:30 a. m.; one desk men at 7:45 and reporters at 8:30 a. m.; and one desk men from 5:30 a. m. to 8:30 a. m. and reporters at 8:30 a. m.

Salaries of editors and reporters were reported as follows:

Editors: Six reported $60, four $55, three $50, one $45, one $35, one $25. Others reported ranged as follows: $50-$75, $50-$85, $25-$50, $25-$35, $20-$45, $40-$60, $50-$100, $30-$50.

Reporters: Six reported $40, one $50, one $45, three $35, one $25, one $48, four $30, one $10. Others reported ranged as follows: $18-$40, $37.50-$50, $15-$45, $25-$50, $20-$30, $35-$40, $35-$50.

Fifteen dailies reported full telegraph service and fourteen pony service. Three indicated two or more wires.

Twenty-four papers reported they printed personals and small items from the country towns. One reported it did not. Others reported "some," "occasionally," small items, and one reporting yes, added that the paper would be "glad to print more."

The average number of inches of advertising carried each day other than on Fridays and on Fridays is given below:

Daily	Friday	Daily	Friday
1,250	2,220	500	.....
1,400	2,000	400	.....
800	1,200	2,000	2,700
1,000	1,000	1,000	2,000
300	300	400	650
1,000	1,500	2,000	3,000
200	250	500	800
1,800	2,400	450	.....
600	800	500	.....
450	500	400	300
500 to 600	same	900	1,900

Sixteen dailies reported they would like to see smaller papers and higher advertising rates, two reported they would not. Others said "it depends," generally speaking," "in some cases."

Twenty three reported they gave theatrical readers with theatrical ads, eleven reported they did not. Twelve reported they charged extra for display advertising to cover the readers, fifteen reported they did not.

Twelve papers reported they were liberal with publicity for local merchants, and eleven reported they were not; others reported "medium," "moderate," "rather strict."

Twenty-four dailies said they had had contests to build circulation and six reported they had not; eight said they were a success and ten said they were not; one said "Yes and No," one "comparatively," two "fair," one "50-50," one "partially"; nine said they gave premiums, thirteen said they did not; five said they had had success in getting circulation direct by mail, twelve said they had not, four reported "little," two reported "fair" and one reported "meager."

Eleven reported 1 edition a day, eleven 2 a day, five 3 a day, and two 4 a day.

Six reported they used full market report and nineteen reported they did not.

Three reported a universal copy desk and that it was successful. Twenty-four reported they did not have a universal desk.

ODELL HITS DAYTON C. OF C.

Replies by Letter to Attack on Country Publishers

Wallace Odell, chairman National Editorial Association Legislative Committee, has addressed a letter to every Chamber of Commerce and trade association in the country protesting the attacks of the Post Office Department and the government envelope contractor at Dayton, O.

Mr. Odell stated that the small daily and weekly publishers felt that they had been subjected to an unwarranted attack because of their activity in promoting a bill to restrict government competition with the printers. He stated that the Dayton contractor had used unfair methods in misrepresenting the legislation sponsored by the National Editorial Association.

Mr. Odell's letter stated in part:

"We want to explain that there is no effort to do away with United States stamped envelopes that we are aware of, or that we are working for. We do not ask to do away with stamped envelopes. The bill that we are sponsoring, the so-called Kendall Bill (H R 4478), contemplates only the regulation of their sale so that the Post Office Department may only retail them with a skeleton return card, what is now used very largely and known as 'office return,' instead of 'special return' cards.

"The Dayton Chamber of Commerce has no interest or concern for the welfare of some 50,000 job printers and publishers in the country, and would indeed be benefited locally if they were all put out of business. The government plant is located in Dayton.

"The stamped envelope contractor is the the author and distributor of the letter, and not the Dayton Chamber of Commerce. Naturally their propaganda is not altruistic as they would have it appear.

"Inasmuch as every trade association and Chamber of Commerce in the country is on record against government competition with private enterprise, it is significant to note the inconsistency of the Dayton Chamber."

A. P. ASKS PUBLIC DENIAL

Probert Claims Sen. Simmons Has Privately Disclaimed Criticisms

L. C. Probert, head of the Associated Press Washington Bureau, in a letter addressed to U. S. Senator Furnifold McL. Simmons, dated Feb. 2, asks public denial of the latter's "unfounded attack" against the A. P., contained in an interview with Southern correspondents two weeks ago. Mr. Probert claims in the letter that Senator Simmons has disclaimed privately his charge that the A. P. "played down" the minority views on the proposed tax reduction, and was part "of a great organized propaganda to destroy the Democratic party."

"The Associated Press does not engage in public controversy with anyone," Mr. Probert wrote, "but it cannot remain silent when its integrity is attacked, and it cannot be satisfied with regrets expressed in private for an unfounded attack made in public.

"If you stand by this statement attributed to you will you please give your grounds for it; if you repudiate it, will you please say so?"

Mr. Probert specifically answers the Senator's contention that the A. P. correspondent, had he "exercised due diligence in the matter," should have obtained a statement from him regarding the tax reduction, by saying:

"The facts of the matter are well known to you. They are that, as you concede was the custom, the chairman of the finance committee, Mr. Smoot, by agreement of the committee made announcements to the newspaper correspondents. It is well known to you that at the conclusion of the session at which the compromise was reached, our Mr. Stephenson asked you personally for your views of the action taken; that you verbally gave him views. When you later prepared a statement and did not communicate it to the Associated Press, I fail to see how under these circumstances you can accuse Mr. Stephenson of a lack of due diligence, because your own office failed to deliver the statement to us.

"You declare the Associated Press gave 'wide publicity' to a statement by Senator Smoot minimizing the compromise brought about by the committee Democrats, when, as a matter of fact, Senator Smoot issued no such statement and the Associated Press distributed none. The figures with which you take issue as being obtained from Senator Smoot were not obtained from Senator Smoot at all, but from the committee actuary. If there is a dispute as to the real effect of the reductions proposed I presume it will come up on the Senate floor during discussion of the tax bill, and, of course, it will be fully reported."

The gist of Senator Simmons' complaint, as reported in EDITOR & PUBLISHER last week, was that the A. P. carried in almost full text the statement of Senator Smoot, Republican, while the statement by himself was "garbled, twisted and disarranged."

Mr. Probert with the letter submitted a file of A. P. dispatches asking Senator Simmons to point out anything to support his charge that minority Senators only can get meagre publicity compared with the majority.

DAILY AWARDS COTTON GROWING PRIZES

Dallas News' $1,000 Prize Goes to Smith County Man Who Grew 16 Bales on 5 Acres—4,400 Farmers Entered

A victory for staple cotton was won in Texas when G. M. Adams, a farmer of near Tyler, Smith county, and a former plumber who turned to farming because he liked it, produced 16 bales of cotton on five acres in the Dallas News and Semi-Weekly Farm News "More Cotton on Fewer Acres" Cotton Contest, winning the $1,000 Grand Prize and the East Texas Staple Prize of $500 as well.

Mr. Adams' achievement is remarkable, the News stated, since it proves that it is possible to raise more cotton per acre with good staple than with the inferior short staples which have glutted the Texas markets this year. This will undoubtedly result in stimulating interest in the growing of staple cotton to which the Dallas News is committed in a five-year-program of agricultural development.

Victor H. Schoffelmayer, agricultural editor of the Dallas News, managed the contest in which 4,400 Texas farmers in 168 counties were entered.

Mr. Adams' yield of net lint cotton on a five-acre basis was 8,081 pounds or 3,000 pounds or six bales more than the record which John W. McFarlane of Anderson county made in 1924 with which he won the $1,000 grand prize. Mr. Adams' yield was at the rate of 1,616 pounds of lint an acre which is more than three bales an acre and his total production is 81 pounds more than sixteen 500-pound bales on five acres of unirrigated land.

The cotton contest has the indorsement of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, the Texas A. & M. College, the Chambers of Commerce and the direct co-operation of the country bankers and merchants who recognize that intesive farming must displace extensive farming if Texas farmers are to become prosperous.

This year the Dallas News and Semi-Weekly Farm News will sponsor a "State-Wide Staple Cotton Contest" for a total of $10,000 in prizes to link quality with high yields.

A. P. CHANGES IN WEST

Walker of Denver, K. C. News Editor —Succeeded by Watkins from N. Y.

Thomas H. Walker, a veteran of the Associated Press and for the last nine years Denver correspondent, has been appointed news editor at the Kansas City office and Charles D. Watkins who has been with the A. P. 16 years goes to Denver from New York as news editor.

Under the new organization, Denver becomes the Associated Press headquarters for the Rocky Mountain division, embracing Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, Wyoming and Montana.

In his new position as news editor for the division embracing states south of Kansas City, Walker also will have charge of relaying news from the Atlantic to the Pacific coasts. Kansas City will continue to be the important relay point of the Associated Press east-west trunk channels.

Under a new arrangement, each division office will be in charge of a news editor who will be responsible for developing and handling news dispatches. In this capacity, news editors will be relieved of the routine executive duties formerly allotted district correspondents.

As an added improvement, new high speed automatic telegraphic printers have been placed in service, it is announced.

BROADCASTING HURTS CIRCULATION DALLAS NEWS EXECUTIVE SAYS

Benefits of a Newspaper Owned Station Largely Indirect, Walter Dealey States—Greatest Value Accrues When It Is Alone in Field

By AUSTIN E. BURGESS

PUBLICITY is what the newspaper has to sell and when radio became the national craze scores of newspaper owners and managers thought they saw in this new means of super-publicity an opportunity to extend their prestige to fields yet unreached. But a moderately strong radio sending station may be heard all over the North American continent and even the most widely circulated newspapers cover only a small portion of the United States. Have the newspapers which maintain sending stations not somehow overdone this thing of publicity?

I took this question to Walter Dealey, assistant general manager of the Dallas Morning News and associated papers, which maintain station WFAA. This station can be heard all over the Western hemisphere. Reports have come in that WFAA programs have been heard in Canada, Australia and England.

"The answer to your question depends on what competition the paper maintaining a sending station has," he replied. "So long as any given newspaper has the only sending station maintained by a newspaper in its city it probably pays to have one. But let another paper in the same city establish a sending station and both lose. Like comic supplements and rotogravure, radiocasting pays until competition of the same kind is established.

"As to the manner in which radio brings its returns, I would say that the greatest returns are indirect. A newspaper draws its income chiefly from the city in which it is located. As the home town is advertised and made to grow the newspaper gets its proportionate part of the increase by greater circulation and greater volume of advertising.

"Radiocasting probably hurts circulation. We notice that we sell fewer copies of the paper in the course of a world baseball series now than we used to before we installed WFAA. As another illustration I might mention that in the first state primary to select a governor last year we sold fewer papers than usual at that time because the public expected us to broadcast the returns. We did not do it and the result was we received orders the next day for many additional copies.

"In the second primary our newsdealers usually accompanied their orders with some such remark as 'If you are going to broadcast returns do not send us the additional copies here called for.' However, our circulation has increased steadily the last two years. We do not feel, though, that we should credit much of this to radio."

"How about foreign advertisers?" I interposed.

"That, too, is open to question. We find that as a result of the work of Station WFAA our representatives seldom find an advertiser who is not acquainted with the names of the Dallas Morning News, Dallas Journal and the Semi-Weekly Farm News. But I see little reason to believe that such acquaintance has increased our foreign advertising patronage."

Does the public listen to the radio? That is another point on which there is much discussion. I approached Alfonso Johnson, advertising manager of the News.

"That is a question," he said, "which will never be decided any more than it can ever be finally decided 'Who won the War'. Such a small percentage of the many thousands supposed to be listening will respond to any one test that can be devised that there is no way of checking up.

"But I can name two instances—and I might name many—which seem to show that the public does listen. Recently Knox Armstrong, a member of the Advertising League, delivered a talk over the radio at the close of which it was announced that he would give a radio log book to all who would write in and say how they liked the program. Within the next few days he received 125 requests, nearly all of them letters, asking for the log book. We figure that if 125 were sufficiently interested to write in that there must have been many thousands who heard but were not interested.

"The Rev. William Anderson, Presbyterian minister, conducts a Sunday school class weekly between 6:30 and 7:30 p. m. Recently Evan Evans was furnishing the singing for the occasion. We announced that we would be glad to have him sing any sacred number called for. The response by phone the next few minutes blocked our phone system. We have mailed out 19,000 cards to persons who have enrolled in this class by mail."

The question "Does radio pay?" is one which it seems cannot be settled by an unequivocal yes or no. As Mr. Dealey has said, it probably does pay when only one newspaper in a town maintains a station. Beyond that, each publisher is compelled to practice the philosophy he deals out to his advertisers when he says that advertising is cumulative and that good will must be reckoned as a part of any concern's capital.

"ITALY IN CHAINS"

That Is Picture Drawn by Wickham Steed, Formerly of London Times

A picture of "Italy in Chains" was drawn by Wickham Steed, formerly editor of the London Times, lecturing recently in London on "Fascism in Theory and Practice."

He said there was no freedom of thought or opinion in Italy today, and declared he thought fascism simply and solely the old doctrine of the Inquisition.

Politically, he continued, it was the more modern doctrine known during the war as Prussianism, the omnipotence of a deified state—a doctrine which British common sense for centuries had thoroughly repudiated.

SURVEYS KANSAS VETERANS

W. H. Johnson of Salina Sun, Has Seen 61 Years of Newspaper Work

Ninety-six Kansas newspaper men have been engaged in that profession for a quarter of a century or more, according to a list compiled by Prof. L. N. Flint, head of the journalism department of the State University. This number represents but 15 per cent. of the active newspaper editors and publishers of the state. Not all of the editors who were sent a questionnaire replied, Mr. Flint stated.

Thirty-two of the men have been in the business for 40 years or more. Their service totals 1,410 years, an average of 44 years. Fifteen of the men have been in the business 41 years.

W. H. Johnson, editor of the Salina Sun is the oldest newspaper man in the state in point of service, having been active for 61 years. John H. Montgomery of the Junction City Union is second with 55 years while his son is starting his 26th year with that paper.

M. M. Beck, Holton Recorder, father of E. S. Beck, managing editor of the Chicago Tribune is third with 51 years' service to his credit. F. H. Roberts, Oskaloosa Independent, is fourth with 50 years.

HARVARD AWARDS DELAYED

Advertising Winners to Be Announced Feb. 23—Jury Sat Jan. 28-29

Although the jury passed on entries for the Harvard Advertising Awards at a meeting in Boston, Jan. 28-30, names of winners will not be announced until Feb. 23. Deane Malott, assistant dean of the Harvard School of Business Administration, informed EDITOR & PUBLISHER this week.

The delay was necessary, he said, in order that the awards might be worded properly, and also in order to allow ample time to prepare a news story for distribution to the press.

The Harvard Awards, which recognizes with medals and cash prizes the outstanding advertising achievements of each year, were founded by Edward Bok, and are distributed annually by the Harvard School of Business Administration, in the same manner as the Pulitzer Prizes are handled by Columbia University.

Jacksonville leads the nation in gain of Postal Receipts

Jacksonville consistently held the lead in gain of postal receipts throughout the last eight months of 1925.

The increase in June over June 1924 was 29 per cent. In November postal receipts mounted to a 55 per cent greater volume than November, 1924. Again in December Jacksonville led the entire country with an increase of 43.40 per cent, topping the fifty largest offices.

Total postal receipts for the year just ended were $1,132,774.

And just as Jacksonville leads the country in gain of postal receipts, so does the Florida Times-Union lead the Florida field in city and state circulation.

INSTRUCTORS FORBIDDEN TO LECTURE TO NORTH DAKOTA "U" STUDENTS

Thorough Discussion of Modern Methods and Practice Believed Better Than Acceptance of Ready-Made Opinions—Study Current Newspapers

By ROY L. FRENCH

Director, Department of Journalism, University of North Dakota

(This is sixth in a series of articles, interpreting the work of journalism schools to editors of the nation.)

THE outstanding feature of the teaching of journalism in the department at the University of North Dakota is the total absence of lectures by the instructors. Instead, the class hours are given over to a thorough discussion of modern methods and practices by the students with the instructor acting as a guide in the discussion.

R. L. FRENCH

We believe that it is far more important for the student to arrive at his own conclusions after a careful study and a thorough discussion of the modern methods and practices, than for the student to accept the ready-made opinions of his instructor.

In journalism as in no other profession there are usually a dozen different ways for doing the same thing. Pick out any 21 newspapers and observe the variety in news treatment. Notice the various methods of make-up and newspaper construction. Compare the ethical reactions of one publication with another. Aside from the purely mechanical methods and practices, but few will be found to be standard.

Our student makes these comparisons. He is equipped with a thinking apparatus and we encourage him to use it. He may obtain an opinion of a given practice which is quite the opposite to that held by the instructor. This is relatively unimportant. It is of vital importance, however, that the student shall have arrived at his conclusion through his own thinking. It is our business to stimulate his thought. In this way and in this way only we believe the student's own judgement and sense of responsibility will best be developed.

There is no make-believe in the practical courses here. The students gather the actual news of the campus and write the stories. Some of them are writing for the student daily. Other students are gathering and preparing campus news stories for the weeklies in the state. Still others are sending out news stories every day to the North Dakota dailies. It is interesting to note in this connection that between January and June last year over 10,000 inches of student written news appeared in the columns of eight North Dakota dailies.

In the editorial classes the students learn to read proof by doing it. They learn to read copy and prepare it for the printer by reading and handling reams of actual copy. Likewise in the editorial writing class, they write editorials, more editorials, and then more editorials. They declare the department to be a work house, but we proceed under the belief that they will learn to write only by doing a great deal of writing. Practice along this line we think is quite as essential for perfection as in the more sacred activity—athletics.

The students study printing in the type laboratory not with a view to becoming journeymen printers, but for the purpose of learning the actual relationship which exists between printing and newspaper or magazine making. They study the various methods of make-up and then they duplicate in the laboratory the sort of thing which in their judgement is best.

They find in this same laboratory that it is one thing to write a headline and quite another to put that same headline into type. And by trying out the various headline schedules that are practiced, they have one more opportunity for forming opinions as to what practices are best.

We do have lectures now and then but they are always given by men brought to the campus from the actual publishing field. And because of our location, these men are usually from the small dailies and country weeklies.

In North Dakota we have no large cities, so naturally our problems are those which will arise in the community rather than in the metropolitan type of journalism.

With this fact in mind, the department puts its greatest emphasis on these community problems.

In a word this department of a state university is operated with a definite realization of its service-duty to the state. It is trying to turn out young men and women, who, having been trained to think and to form independent judgements, will be the intelligent North Dakota editors of the future.

The secret, if any there be, in our system may lie in the fact that our classes are small having from 12 to 25 in them. In any event we believe it is working. Of the six graduates last June, three are successfully editing country weeklies, one is city editor of a small daily, one is a reporter on a daily, and the sixth is doing graduate work in the university. We are training them for the journalism of North Dakota, but we believe they will be able to give a good account of themselves should they ever turn to the metropolitan newspaper field.

Roy L. French, head of the department of journalism at the University of North Dakota, writer of the above article, received his A.B. and M.A. at the University of Wisconsin course in journalism. He received his practical experience as editor of several weekly newspapers in Kansas and as correspondent for various metropolitan newspapers. He is at present the national secretary of Sigma Delta Chi, professional journalistic fraternity.

Newspaper advertising is the gre secret of business success, A. A. Come head of the Globe Ice Cream Compa of Los Angeles, told a recent meeting the Pacific Ice Cream Manufacture Association in Portland, Ore.

Success in his business, which has b come one of the largest in Los Angel is attributed by Comey to the use display advertising, packed by quali goods.

"We do not believe in small, six-in ads but we do believe in using b smashing copy, and it does the work asserted Comey.

"The first and strongest publicity a advertising medium for food produc is the daily newspaper, for the reas that the daily newspaper is as necessa in the home as one's meals. Throu the power of suggestion it is the stron est medium to educate the entire hous hold."

He advocated a united and extensi campaign by the Association. It w taken up in its formative stages at t meeting and will probably lead to adve tising expenditure in Pacific Coast new papers.

CINCINNATI is a Great Shoe Market

For more than a hundred years Cincinnati has been one of the great shoe and leather centers of the United States. The value of the output of Cincinnati shoe factories amounts to tens of millions of dollars annually.

But Cincinnati is a great buyer as well as a great manufacturer and seller of shoes. As in the selection of their foods, their clothing, their automobile tires, their radio sets and musical instruments, the people of Cincinnati are influenced very largely in the selection of their footwear by the consistency with which footwear is advertised in their favorite newspaper.

To Cincinnati shoe merchants there is no uncertainty as to which of the four local papers is the favorite newspaper. Years and years of carefully checking their sales against their advertising expenditures have demonstrated that the people of Cincinnati read the Times-Star and respond to it as they read and respond to no other publication. This is why the Times-Star carries more than twice as much display advertising of boots and shoes as the second afternoon newspaper and more than double that of both morning newspapers combined, including their Sunday editions.

Individually the readers of the Times-Star wear no more shoes than the readers of other newspapers. It is simply that more people, many more, who live in the city and suburbs of Cincinnati and who buy their shoes from Cincinnati merchants, read the Times-Star, and that they read it with greater interest and greater faith.

URGES PRESS GROUPS TO BACK CRUSADES

Prof. Simmons Advocates Definite Program for State Associations at Syracuse Meeting of New York Publisher's Group

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Feb. 5.—The New York State Press Association, composed of editors and publishers representing nearly 200 newspapers from communities in all parts of the state, gathered at Hotel Onondaga, Friday of this week, for the 74th annual meeting of the association. The sessions continue Saturday with election of officers.

At the opening session Friday morning Prof. John O. Simmons, of the Department of Journalism at Syracuse University, in his address on "Your Association As I See It," declared that it is time for the newspapers to take inventory as institutions for the public service in the face of current criticism that they are "no longer watchdogs for the public interests."

Taking issue with M. S. Sherman, editor of the Springfield Union, who stated at Boston last week it is time for the newspapers to do "a little judicious hitting back" at magazine critics of the newspapers, Prof. Simmons said this is not the way to prove the worth of an effective institution.

"It is time the newspapers began to show concerted constructive public service programs, carefully mapped out by the various state press associations and their regional divisions," he maintained. "If there is to be 'striking back' there must be individual personalities among editors and publishers who are willing to be aggressive crusaders. Such individuals should be given encouragement and backing by their respective press associations.

"An excellent example of crusade is the plan of Editor E. J. Lynett of the Scranton Times to bring about a settlement of the present coal strike, which all but succeeded. If the press of Pennsylvania had backed this plan or any single plan, and the press in other states had joined forces a dilemma would not have been forced upon Congress, and President Coolidge would have had plenty of backing from the resultant public sentiment which would have saved consumers money and hardship in the end."

Examples of aggressive service were cited among New York State papers such as the Rhinebeck Gazette, the Cobbleskill Times, and others. Among the dailies the Rochester Democrat-Chronicle was cited for its series of special articles on the increasing costs of local, state and national government and their influence in that city.

"The newspaper is too influential a factor to be a mere reflector of what is happening every day," continued the speaker. "Newspapers have become prosperous business concerns within the past few years, and they deserve prosperity after a period of struggle dating back to the days when revenues were hardly enough to pay the staff men. As long as they are courageous, aggressive and independent crusaders along with their financial independence there is nothing to worry about."

PENNY PAPER IN JERSEY

Elizabeth Times Issues New Independent "Peach" Edition

The Elizabeth (N. J.) Times began Feb. 1 issuing a new independent edition called the "Peach," which is sold for one cent. It appears on the street at 4 o'clock daily. Earlier editions are still being issued with the New York Evening Journal, and the Sunday Times is distributed with the New York American.

The Times was purchased recently by Arthur Brisbane, M. L. Annenberg and Herbert Cranzer. Mr. Cranzer is publisher and Arthur Warner, editor. The penny edition appears in a changed type dress in eight-column form.

On Feb. 3 the Times published a special 40-page edition, edited entirely by members of the Junior League of Elizabeth.

Mr. C. N. Landon, Art Director,
NEA Service, Inc.,
Cleveland, Ohio.

Dear Sir:

We are planning to drop the one feature on our daily page of comics that is not an NEA feature.

In its place we wish to start "Boots and Her Buddies".

We were struck very forcibly by the exceptionally good introductory strip for "Mom'n Pop" that you prepared for the La Crosse Tribune, and are hoping that something similar can be prepared for us for introducing "Boots and Her Buddies" to our readers.

NEA Service comics are going over big for the Times-Journal. This is true of the daily page, and very much so of the four-page section in colors that we issue with our Sunday edition.

Very truly yours,

DUBUQUE TIMES-JOURNAL

Edw. G. Fairfield

JOURNALISM IS BROAD ROAD TO FAME BUT WEALTH LIES OUTSIDE

Young Reporter Must Become Fiction Writer, Executive or Owner or Be Content with a Top Salary of $3,000 at 45, Journalism Teachers' Committee Reports JOURNALISM is a broad highway to fame, but to reap adequate financial rewards from its practice a newspaper man must become a successful writer of books or magazine articles, an executive, or the owner of a newspaper property.

ERIC ALLEN

This is the conclusion of the committee on earnings in journalism of the American Association of Teachers of Journalism presented at the recent annual meeting of the group at Columbia University, New York.

In the broad average, a "top" of $3,000 at the age of 45 is the best a man can expect who prefers to remain in the position of reporter or copy-reader, Dean Eric Allen of the University of Oregon school of journalism, who submitted the committee's report, said.

Using the questionnaire method, the committee, composed of Dean Allen, Prof. M. G. Osborn of Louisiana, Prof. W. A. Sumner of Wisconsin, and Prof. H. H. Herbert of Oklahoma and Harry B. Center, Boston, sought to find a normal or average in a field in which everybody knows enormous variations exist."

Questionnaires were sent to 250 journalists listed in "Who's Who in America," 55 members of the press gallery of Congress, 100 city editors of papers of more than 100,000 circulation taken from the EDITOR & PUBLISHER YEAR BOOK and a list of 160 former Oregon journalism students now actively engaged in newspaper work.

"While this whole aggregate of source material appears rather formidable, still the committee regretfully reports that it cannot be collated into satisfactory tabulations, nor the result given out as scientific research," Dean Allen stated. "The answers are too frequently and too variously qualified, and it is altogether too obvious that neither editors nor writers have any very consistent idea as to just how well compensated their profession is. The method used was essentially that of asking the persons in closest touch with the situation to set down the figures their extensive experience had taught them to regard as usual and normal.

"The committee's questionnaire was intent on gaining information on three points: First, the economic return received by a young man entering journalism at the age of 25; second, the reasonable economic expectations for this same young man when he should become an experienced reporter 35 years old, and third, what he could expect of economic return if he should find himself at 45, a reporter or desk man in a non-executive position. These questions were asked for cities over 1,000,000 population, for cities between 150,000 and 1,000,000, and for smaller cities supporting weeklies. The committee also wanted to know what proportion of a journalist's income comes from salary and what from correspondence and other professional activity. It also wanted comparative figures for magazines, trade journals, and publicity work.

"As to results, $25 a week appears to be regarded as a usual average wage for an inexperienced reporter 25 years old. This seems to be as true in one part of the country as another.

"Ten years later if the different returns are averaged the resultant is exactly $2,500 with the estimates symmetrically grouped about that sum.

"In another ten years the young man has entered middle age, the point when his powers should be at their maximum and his usefulness greatest. These second ten years should have constituted his prime.

"Yet the testimony of the questionnaires is quite definite on this point: some think the reporter or copyreader of 45 is worth $500 a year more than the same man at 35, (our New England data implies $1,000 more), but many think increasing age and experience mean nothing at all, and a considerable number set down a distinct decline in earning power.

"So much for the first questionnaires. Now for the interpretation. The committee will submit, without arguing the point, that under present American conditions $3,000 is a low income for an educated professional man between the ages of 35 and 45, living under city conditions."

Finding the economic pathway blocked many newspaper men successfully enter other lines as shown by the 2,350 journalists listed in "Who's Who," Dean Allen stated.

Seeking to answer the question "What becomes of old reporters," he declared.

"If under our commercial order, our successful young graduate is not going to be allowed by society to be a reporter for more than a very few years, what is he going to do? To what functions should be expect to devote his life, and for what kind of permanent work should his curriculum prepare him? For a glance at the curricula offered in many places shows that many institutions are laying all their emphasis upon work for which society persists in regarding as within the capabilities of a bright youngster and for which it refuses to pay wages that will long detain a grown man of the success-compelling sort.

"It may be said that present indications are that journalism graduates are going to do considerably better in an economic way than anything indicated in this paper. This is no time to proclaim it from the housetops—the data are still too new and too scattered—but the writer has reason to believe that the male graduates of his school are earning in salary and space checks and in profits from newspaper property acquired from earnings about $100 per year for each year of the individual's age: in other words $2,500 at 25, $3,000 at 30 and with every prospect of continuing at this rate of increase for years to come.

"It is noticeable that the journalism graduate is less dependent upon the salary and counts more on his general writing for sale than does the average American journalist. It was a surprise to find how little the writing journalist usually earns "on the side." Even the Washington correspondents reported almost nothing from book royalties and little from magazine articles. This is believed to represent quite a different situation from the more mature journalism of England, where the names of journalists of rank equal to our special correspondents are constantly appearing on magazine tables of contents and on book publishers' announcements. The indications are that the young journalism graduate intends to follow this English precedent.

"The general conclusion is that it is unwise to encourage young men to expect a satisfactory economic return from an aptitude in journalism that is restricted to straight reporting, copyreading, make-up, etc. The course should be directed toward qualifying the graduate to turn his hand to thoroughly creditable magazine contributions, to an understanding of contemporary life deep enough to justify him occasionally in venturing upon a journalistic book, a book about the affairs of the day and in line with his other writing experience, or, on the other hand, should train him in the problems of business management and mechanical production, cultivating his independence and any aptitude he may have for financial responsibility."

Those listed in "Who's Who" as journalists constituted one-eleventh of the total listing, it was stated, with the comment that journalism is a broad road to fame whether it leads to wealth or not.

URGES HIGHER WEEKLY RATES

Victor Hanson Says Present Prices Too Low at Alabama Group Meet

The mid-winter meeting of the North Alabama section of the Alabama Press Association was held at the Hillman Hotel in Birmingham, Jan. 30. The importance to the state of co-operation between the farmers and the newspaper editors was stressed by several speakers.

Victor H. Hanson, publisher of the Birmingham News, urged weekly publishers to adopt a uniform schedule of advertising and of subscription rates. He pointed out the fact the weekly papers in Alabama are charging just what they charged ten years ago for their papers notwithstanding the fact that today newsprint paper is worth two and a half times as much as it was then. He also suggested a higher rate for national advertising. He stated that 1926 gives promise of being the best year that newspapers of the country have ever had, specially in national advertising.

President J. C. McLendon presided at the meeting.

1925 was a MUST year!... Advertisers changed many pet ideas during that period

EVEN prosperous Los Angeles, for example, where more than 1,100,000 people are ready and willing and able to buy everything that is advertised . . . even there, some revision of past efforts was needed in many places to keep the sales records up.

With what result, from an advertising standpoint?

This: That Los Angeles merchants bought 600,000 more lines of advertising in The Los Angeles Examiner during 1925 than during 1924; while every other newspaper in the city showed a distinct LOSS in local advertising.

TRANSPACIFIC RADIO PRESS RATE CUT OF 17 CENTS A WORD UP TO JAPAN

Karl A. Bickel, Addressing Ohio Publishers, Declares U. P. Won Harbord's Approval for Reduction from 27 Cents to 10 Cents

"NO business in America is growing with greater rapidity and strength than the newspaper industry," declared Karl A. Bickel, president of the United Press Associations, at the annual banquet of the Ohio Associated Dailies of Columbus, Ohio, Wednesday night. The same tendency, he asserted, was very noticeable all over the world. Newspapers in every land were turning away from the old and vicious theory that a paper must be supported by a governmental or political subsidy and were now establishing themselves upon a straight and honest business basis as legitimate business institutions. The fact that this change took place first in America, he declared, was one of the reasons why the American press leads the world in honesty, high ethical standards, influence and wealth.

KARL A. BICKEL

"The same influence is most marked in the press association business," stated Bickel in his address. "The fact that the newspaper publishers of the world are demanding honesty and absolute independence from governmental propaganda in their press association service has been one of the fundamental factors in the success of the United Press. The United Press is now America's greatest world wide distributor of news sending its dispatches into 36 different nations. The United Press ranks with the oil, automobile and moving picture industry in the world wide spread of its activities."

During the progress of his address Bickel announced that as the result of negotiations between Gen. Harbord, president of the Radio Corporation of America, and the United Press, the former had agreed to make a reduction from 27 to 10 cents per word on press matter filed between the United States and Japan and that the establishment of this rate was now only awaiting the approval of the Minister of Communications of Japan to go into effect.

"This drastic reduction in the press rate via wireless between the United States and Japan," asserted Bickel, "when it is approved by the Japanese government, will prove to be the greatest forward step taken to insure peace between Japan and the United States in the history of the relations of the two nations. General Harbord demonstrate[s] he is as great a leader in busin[ess] as he was in war when he made the decision to make this rate thus making it possible for the peoples of the two countries to establish an adequate news exchange."

"The newspapers of South America," said Bickel, "are making remarkable progress both in the improvement of their news content and the development of better publishing plants. No newspaper in the world carries as large an amount of cable news as La Prensa of Buenos Aires" he stated, "and frequently the amount of cable news in La Prensa would total three times as much as carried in any New York newspaper. The editorial standards of the South American papers are very high and the attention paid to international politics, literature and the arts by the South American press is far greater than paid to cultural side of life by the American daily press."

New Pulp Company Formed

Definite announcement has now been made of the formation of the British Columbia Pulp and Paper Company to take over from the receiver the business of the Whalen Pulp and Paper Company in British Columbia. The assets of the latter company were purchased by the first mortgage bondholders. These will receive equivalent bonds of the new corporation together with a bonus of 7 per cent preferred stock in the proportion of $150 worth of stock for each $1,000 bond. Debenture holders of the defunct company will be entitled to subscribe for 7 per cent general mortgage bonds in the new company at the rate of $400 for each $1,000 held and will be given a bonus of common stock.

The Church Advertising Committee of the Associate Advertising Clubs of the World, has sent out to about 600 newspapers a new series of "Come-to-Church" display advertisements for publication in Saturday issues. No set charge is made to publishers, but they are asked to contribute to the work of preparing the copy as much as they see fit. Dr. Christian F. Reisner is president of the committee.

"U" STUDENTS SCOFF AT PRESS AGENTS

Ivan Benson, University Daily Kansan, Cries "The Same Old Bromide!" When Butterick Seeks Free Space for Style News

An attempt to induce newspapers to publish one column line drawings of fashions in women's garments as a free publicity stunt for the Butterick pattern and magazine organization in New York, is being met with some resistance by editors who recognize in the style cuts advertising intended to sell patterns.

Each cut carries a copyright notice and the word "Butterick" and the number of the patterns. The offering was made in a circular letter broadcast to newspaper publishers by R. G. Woodcock, of the Butterick Company. In returning this free publicity bit to EDITOR & PUBLISHER this week Ivan Benson, of the staff of the University Daily Kansan, published by the department of journalism of the University of Kansas, made the following observations:

"What hope must be springing in the breast of the free advertising space grabber who is sending out the inclosed Butterick type of 'up-to-the-minute, authoritative, entertainingly written, and illustrated' news!

"The letter of the Honorable R. G. Woodcock speaks for itself. First, the very delicate emotional appeal as an eye-opener. 'Is there anything of keener interest to women than the ever-changing fashion? Is there anything women fear more than being out of style?' Oh, no! Nothing! Nothing! The first point is won.

"'Because editors want the latest and the most authentic style news for their papers, many of them have asked us if we could help them.' Yes, indeed, all two of them!

"'That is why hundreds of newspapers have adopted this service as a regular daily feature (see the attached proof).' Yes, gentlemen, if you have time you might take a glance at the attached proof.

"'While this fashion service was originally started at the direct request of editors that we help them with their women's pages, we believe it is of equal interest and value to others. So we are now offering it to you, free of charge, for the use of your newspaper.

"'Do you want this service? Then just fill in and mail the enclosed postal card.

"The same old bromide! The University Daily Kansan is not using any of this stuff. It's a college daily and the young editors haven't had a great deal of experience in the newspaper field but they know soft soap when they see it."

NEWSPAPER MAKERS AT WORK

By PHILIP SCHUYLER

Proud to be Dallas booster.—E. J. Kiest.

"WHEN you see a good thing for the town, get behind it and push."

From Edwin J. Kiest, publisher of the Dallas (Tex.) Times-Herald, comes this bit of newspaper wisdom, which, he says, furnished most of the motive power enabling him to work up from scratch to his present position as one of the wealthiest newspaper owners in the Lone Star State.

"Get as close to your city as you can," is his suggestion. "Help it to grow, and don't forget to grow with it. One way to help, as a matter of fact, is to keep ahead of your city in growth."

Mr. Kiest did not forget. Thirty years ago he purchased the Times-Herald, becoming a publisher on a shoe-string. The paper's circulation was then a mere 1,500, in a city of 35,000. Mr. Kiest jumped from department to department in those early days. One moment he was reporter, then compositor, editor, copy-reader, make-up man and printer. When copies came from the old press, he even carried a route.

Today the Times-Herald claims a circulation of 60,000 and having outgrown its present plant, built 20 years ago, Mr. Kiest is making plans to erect a new building.

And while his own paper was growing ahead of the city, he was helping Dallas prosper. It was Mr. Kiest who originated the slogan, "Let's lift Dallas out of the mud," a slogan which, promoted through the Times-Herald, turned deep sand roads into 130 miles of paved highways. For 15 years he was director of the local Chamber of Commerce, and for 22 years was a director of the Texas State Fair, six of which he was president.

"Our theory in the conduct of the Times-Herald," he said, "is Dallas, first; the county, second; the State, third; the United States, fourth; and then the rest of the world."

When he was 17 years old, Mr. Kiest held cases on the old Chicago Times. Prior to that he had spent a number of years on the streets selling copies of the late Victor F. Lawson's paper, the Chicago Daily News. Then he took up the printing trade.

"On the Chicago Times I tried reporting, too," Mr. Kiest said. "But I was fired every day to be hired the next. My copy never seemed to come in right. I was one of those good news gatherers, who don't know how to write."

After this he joined the Western Newspaper Union, and was sent to various bureaus of that organization in different sections of the country. He was with the Western Newspaper Union in Dallas when he decided to become a publisher.

Sentenced for Misleading Ads

The first conviction under the recently enacted Statute No. 319, Public Acts of Michigan, relative to the publication of misleading advertisements, was secured last Saturday in Detroit against Harry Siegel, proprietor of a cut-rate cigar store. Siegel was tried and upon conviction of using misleading advertising, was sentenced to 30 days in the Detroit House of Correction, with the alternative of paying a fine of $85.

MISSOURI GROUP ELECTS WHITE

Macon Republic Editor President of Northeast Press Association

Edgar White, editor of the Macon Republic, was elected president of the Northeast Missouri Press Association at the annual meeting last week in Macon. Omer D. Gray, of the Sturgeon Leader, was elected vice-president; Charles H. Weisenborn, Macon Daily Chronicle-Herald, secretary-treasurer, and George D. Shafer, Lancaster Republican, publicity director. The July meeting of the organization was given to Monroe City.

Resolutions adopted by the association endorsed the road building program; urged reasonable appropriations for improvement of the Mississippi and Missouri rivers to secure better freight rates for mid-west farmers; and early adoption of the Mindall bill to discontinue competition in the printing industry by the government.

Cleveland, Ohio,
December 8th, 1925.

The Christian Science Monitor,
Boston,
Mass.

Gentlemen:

I am quite sure you will be very glad to learn that we plan to advertise Osborn Blue Handle Household and Personal Use Brushes, throughout 1926, in The Christian Science Monitor.

In fact, we are so thoroughly gratified with the response which has come from our advertising in the Monitor throughout 1925 that a decision was reached to substantially increase the amount of space to be used in 1926. (Nearly 100% increase, I am told).

Personally, I wish to take this occasion to express to you - to your organization and to the readers of The Monitor throughout the world, our appreciation of the splendid support which we have received.

This new Division of our business (Osborn Blue Handle Household and Personal Use Brush) has developed splendidly and the indications are that 1926 will hold much for us, as we trust and feel confident it will for The Christian Science Monitor and its large family.

Cordially,

THE OSBORN MANUFACTURING COMPANY

THE LEAGUE CONFERENCE

THAT there will be, during the year, a conference of representative newspaper executives under the auspices of the League of Nations, at Geneva, now seems assured. That a large number of nations, including the United States, will send delegates is indicated by replies received from many nations to an inquiry made some weeks ago, following the favorable action of the Assembly upon the motion of the Chilian delegate that a committee of press experts be convened to plan improved world communications service, looking to better world understanding of public questions and furtherance of what is known as "moral disarmament."

There is much speculation in regard to the kind and size of committee that should be formed. One school of thought favors a very large gathering, representative of journalism in all of its various phases, from which to select sub-committees for special undertakings. Another opinion favors a small preliminary committee, broadly representative of nations and journalistic interests, and it is pointed out that the experience of the League has been that a small committee works much better than a large one in international conferences. However, EDITOR & PUBLISHER is informed that the question of size of the committee is considered of relative unimportance if it can be truly representative of the press of the world.

The question of improved facilities for the movement of news on land wires, cables and radio, and at rates which make possible more complete reporting, will be one of the major problems of the conference. Methods by which official news can be authenticated, to reduce the liability of misstatement, is another prime feature of the proposed agenda. Greatest of all questions will be the one concerning censorship.

These vital matters, which concern the people of the world and myriad interests, are felt as a stupendous task for a press committee, but nothing in journalism is more challenging than the feat of obliterating barriers that have long hindered the free flow of world information. It is a sky-high ideal, so well worth striving for that men will go to the ends of the world on the mere possibility of even remotely serving it.

The newspapers of the United States may differ in a thousand matters of international public policy, may be hopelessly divided in editorial opinion upon adherence to the World Court or entrance into the League, but the newspapers of America are surely a solid unit for the free flow of authentic international public information as a sound basis for public opinion, and EDITOR & PUBLISHER believes such is the true purpose of the proposed Geneva Conference.

How comforting a big or little nailed-down fact; how tiresome the wilderness of abstraction, generality, assertion, which rages in the press—put there very largely by those who express only contempt for newspaper writers who demand tangible proofs for their reports.

INSURANCE ADVERTISING

THE editor of The Insurance Field, a trade paper for insurance men, recently published an editorial captioned, "Advertising Waste." The burden of the argument is that clever insurance men will avoid "wasting" money in newspaper or periodical advertising, but direct paid publicity to insurance agents.

This editorial has drawn fire from the editor of Texas Insurance, a trade paper published at Dallas, who declares that insurance advertising directed to the public has been a success when used in Texas. "It has produced exceptionally fine results in the way of direct business to the companies," he asserted.

This editor, who writes with an open mind for the benefit of the industry his paper is calculated to serve, gives the following general advice, which seems like sound sense to us:

"We are at a loss to understand how any insurance journal can consistently criticise any legitimate form of publicity which an insurance company uses to spread the gospel of its own merit. Neither can we understand why so reputable a paper as The Insurance Field should go out of its way to incur the enmity of newspapers and general periodicals against the insurance business by publishing an editorial so poorly expressing the general sentiment to be found among insurance companies and company executives in general."

And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.—Isaiah, II; 4.

MARKETS AS BATTLEFIELDS

"AN advertising appropriation is something like an army in action," said A. M. Staehle, of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, recently. "While its strength, naturally, is somewhat dependent on numbers, its effectiveness is even more dependent on the proper distribution of its units. This is especially true of an industrial advertising appropriation, which must often scatter its forces over wide and diversified battlefields known as markets. The expenditure of too much effort in one market with a consequent dearth of effort in another, is as dangerous to the success of advertising as the commission of a similar error would be to military strategy."

This big truth has never been better expressed. Mr. Staehle recognizes that the question of the market supersedes in result importance all questions of media, volume, rate and the hundred and one other minor problems that occupy so much attention among advertising executives.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER has long contended that the urgent need of the advertising industry is better understanding of market conditions. To serve this cause our Space Buyers' Guide is published, and if the administration of an advertising appropriation is "something like an army in action," this EDITOR & PUBLISHER annual might well be called the military intelligence of the campaign, for it is a compilation of the vital economic and social conditions existing in all of the cities and towns of the United States where daily newspapers are published. In all of its works EDITOR & PUBLISHER serves the principle that advertising investment made with full understanding of market conditions is safe investment.

Entertainment is the craze of the hour in America; the newspaper that fails to cater to legitimate reader entertainment slights a broad and useful field

USE PLAIN TYPE

AS was recently announced in EDITOR & PUBLISHER news columns New York Times altered its body-type dress to conform to the judgment of skilled opticians who found that the new dress would be an improved service to readers. The Times leads the way on a subject that deserves wide-spread attention among publishers.

According to a bulletin recently issued by the Eye-Sight Conservation Council of America, following a two-year survey of general conditions, defective sight is affecting the country's industrial production, hinders education and menaces human welfare in countless directions.

Here are some of the assertions of this expert board:

"The survey covers eye tests of more than 14,200,000 school-children and students enrolled in public schools, State normal schools, universities and colleges.

"The survey of 247 city schools provided statistics of the results of testing the eyes of 863,936 children. Of this number, one group of 483,154 shows, according to the report that 21.9 per cent. had defective vision. A similar conclusion was reached by the Federal authorities.

"Defective vision is increasing among older students, the survey in colleges and normal schools indicates. In sixteen State normal schools and twenty-three colleges and universities having a total enrolment of approximately 100,000 students, 54,695 tests were made, showing that 18,706 or 40 per cent. had defective vision.

"Two-thirds of those reporting found defective vision within the range from 35 to 50 per cent.

"Poor eyes induce retardation and are responsible in some measure for the backward student.

"Information was furnished by 170 companies located in 23 states and employing over 1,000,000 persons. The data furnished by 40 companies was complete enough for adequate summary and comparison.

"'The records of these 40 companies cover the examinations of the eyes of 204,817 employees,

"'The average proportion of defective vision as reported by 40 companies was 44.3 per cent.

"'The records from 20 companies of 150,782 eye examinations or 77 per cent. of the 204,817 examinations reported showed the prevalence of defective vision ranging from 48.3 per cent. to 79.2 per cent. and averaging 54 per cent'."

Plain print in a newspaper should be one of the best circulation builders that can be imagined, if these statistics are reliable.

A newspaper that fails to express soul is like a human being without a heart.

A CLASSIFIED SUGGESTION

ANYONE who has stood behind the counter of the classified department of any newspaper office knows how the average man and woman struggles to write copy. Advertisement writing is an uncommon art. It is a relatively simple thing to dash off a telegram—a classified advertisement seems to puzzle almost everyone.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER makes the following suggestion: Prepare a card of specimen advertisements. Show a variety of excellently worded advertisements in all classifications, and at various lengths. These will offer the best suggestions that an advertiser could have. Over each specimen give the number of words or lines and the cost, thus making the entire transaction comprehensive. The saving of time of classified clerks alone should justify the enterprise.

NOW WE KNOW

"WHAT is a public relations council?" Edward L. Bernays, who is no stranger to editors who watch press agents and propagandists out of the corner of the left eye, asks and answers this question in a circular which he publishes to promote his business.

"The public relations counsel," he says, "carries forward to a logical development, along broader and more constructive lines, the work of the 'publicity man.'"

There—that little mystery is solved!

FOLKS WORTH KNOWING

JOHN D. RARIDAN, who, with associates, has purchased the majority interest and is now president and general manager of the Lima (O.) Republican-Gazette, began newspaper work on a small-town weekly in Havana, Ill., in 1908.

JOHN D. RARIDAN

His first experience in the daily field was with the Bloomington (Ill.) Bulletin, which recently passed into the hands of W. Kee Maxwell, with whom Mr. Raridan had worked in the editorial department of the Peoria Herald-Transcript some years ago.

Mr. Raridan spent some time on the staff of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, later returning to Peoria as telegraph editor of the Star, and in 1910 went to the Cleveland Leader, remaining there for five years. Later, after a short time on the Cleveland Plain Dealer, following the Leader's absorption by the Plain Dealer, Mr. Raridan was with the St. Louis Republic as night editor.

During the World War he spent a year with Headquarters Troop of the 83rd Division in France. Upon returning to this country, he again joined the Republic as night editor, under Sam Hellman, who was then managing editor, remaining until its purchase by the Globe-Democrat.

Mr. Raridan returned to Cleveland with the News for a short time, then came to New York to join King Features Syndicate and has, since that time, traveled a large portion of the country for the allied enterprises, King Features, International Features, International News Service and Universal Service.

LUDLOW QUALITY COMPOSITION

Orlando Morning Sentinel Welcomes Ludlow Results

President W. M. Glenn of the Orlando Morning Sentinel, Inc., expresses his opinion of the Ludlow in the plant of this progressive Florida newspaper.

"THE Ludlow Typograph has played a very important part in the production of our headlines and advertising. With the assistance of this silent partner, we have earned thousands of dollars and given our advertisers pleasing proofs besides increasing the typographical excellence of the Sentinel.

"The upkeep has been very small, and it will not be long until Inland Florida's Greatest Newspaper is compelled to place an order for another.

"We hope the day will come when we will have a bank of six or more in full blast."

LUDLOW QUALITY COMPOSITION

These Iowa Daily Newspapers have pledged themselves to the "Iowa plan"—a unique way of obtaining uniform co-operation for worthwhile advertisers.

If your sales need increasing—try Iowa. We will help you.

Mr. and Mrs. Iowa, and the Iowa children — all read daily newspapers!

NEWSPAPER reading is an established habit with millions of intelligent Americans, but very few states in the Union can show as high a record in this respect as Iowa.

In Iowa it is literally true that every family takes a daily newspaper.

This includes the farmer, the business man, the professional man, the office worker and the factory employe.

It takes in Iowa, Mrs. Iowa and the Iowa children.

And they all have money at their command for purchase of the merchandise they read about in the newspaper advertisements.

Are you giving them a chance to read about your product?

If you aren't then somebody else is getting the business that rightfully belongs to you.

The man who has something to sell will make a gilt-edge investment by arranging for an advertising schedule in the daily Iowa newspaper—without delay.

NEW NEWSPRINT MILL PLANNED

Spruce Falls Company to Invest 12 to 15 Millions in Canadian Development

The Spruce Falls Pulp and Paper Company, which acquired 3,000 square miles of timber limits from the Ontario Government last September and which previously held 1,700 square miles, are to erect a 500-ton newsprint mill at Kapuskasing, Ont., where they already operate a 115-ton sulphite mill.

As a preliminary they will build a 50-mile railway from Kapuskasing, in Northern Ontario, to Smoky Falls on the Mattagami River and at this point they will construct a power plant with 50,000 h. p. capacity.

It will take about 8 months to build the railway, after which work on both power plant and newsprint mill will be commenced. The probable date of completion of the plant is 1928. The Spruce Falls Company is owned by Kimberley-Clark Company of Neenah, Wis. The whole investment will r ın from twelve to fifteen million dollars.

N. Y. World Starts Florida Edition

In co-operation of the Miami News, the New York World is furnishing winter visitors in Florida with complete New York news daily. Under the World masthead, the news is displayed in two pages of the Miami paper every day. The edition began publishing Jan. 15. W. T. Bliss, make-up editor of the World, is in charge in Miami, with David Loth in charge in New York. Between 15,000 to 20,000 words are sent from New York every night using two leased wires.

SHERMAN ANSWERS CRITICS

Springfield Union Editor Says Venal Papers Are Glaring Exceptions

A spirited answer to critics of the American press was made by M. S. Sherman, editor of the Springfield (Mass.) Union, at the annual dinner of The Tech, undergraduate publication of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, in Hotel Lenox, Boston, last week Mr. Sherman said that the press is capitalistic only to extent that it seeks to operate, like every other business, for profit.

"If the great majority of newspapers believe in the social structure as it has been developed here in America," he said, "it does not indicate a ruthless capitalism on their part. Rather it may be cited as a manifestation of their common sense."

Mr. Sherman declared that there is a great need of a revival of courageous journalism. He admitted that many newspapers have the shortcomings of sensationalism and commercialism, but he pointed out that the venal newspaper is so exceptional that the discovery of one only goes to prove the incorruptibility of the press as a whole.

Correction

Through a typographical error an asterisk indicating a "No Sunday Edition" was omitted before the name of the Chicago American in the 1925 advertising linage lists printed in EDITOR & PUBLISHER, Jan. 23, giving the impression that the American is a seven-day paper. It is a six-day evening newspaper.

ST. PAUL KNEW THE VALUE OF PUBLICITY

"No minister who claims that advertising cheapens the message of the church will ever quote one word from St. Paul, if he is consistent. Paul glorified that profession forever, no matter how men have debased it since. He said 'Go ye into the bypaths and compel men to come.' Advertising is a modern bypath."

So reads the introduction to the new Publicity Manual of the Universalist denomination.

The value of church advertising is being comprehended by church leaders everywhere and the newspaper that's awake will recognize a great opportunity in that fact.

We will furnish ideas for building a church page, and provide copy for a cooperative campaign through which your newspaper can reach the spiritual bypaths. Address your request to the

N. Y. REPORTER DIES

"Jim" Doherty, District Veteran, Broke the Ford Murder Story in 1902

James A. Doherty, 48, veteran New York district reporter, who died Jan. 29, in New York, was credited with having broken one of the biggest murder stories of the time, the murder of Paul Leicester Ford, the novelist, by his brother, Malcolm Webster Ford, champion all-around American athlete. That was in 1902, and Doherty was then on the New York Sun.

Police had been called to the Ford home. Reporters were outside. None was admitted. A uniformed messenger boy approached.

"Hey, kid, where are you going with that telegram?" Jimmy shouted.

"To Mr. Ford's house."

"No, you aren't. Come here," Jimmy said. In the hallway Jimmy gave him $1, exchanged caps and coat with the boy and went up to the door of the Ford mansion.

"Ill sign for it," volunteered the footman, who answered the bell.

"No, you won't. Mr. Ford'll have to sign for it himself."

And it was not until the butler had volunteered the information that Ford had just been murdered by his brother, who had himself committed suicide, that Jimmy relinquished the message.

Besides the Sun he worked on the City News Association, the Herald and the New York Times, where he was employed when he died.

San Francisco Veteran Dead

W. S. Dreypolcher, 65, display advertising manager of the San Francisco Chronicle, died Jan. 26, after a short illness. He began his newspaper career as an errand boy for the Chronicle in 1875. Years later he served on the Call and as advertising manager of the Examiner, returning to the Chronicle in 1919. He was one of the most widely known newspaper men in San Francisco and had seen more than 50 years active service in that city.

Former Chicago Publisher Dies

James J. West, former owner of the old Chicago Times and Chicago Daily Mail, died in Washington, D. C., Jan. 27. Mr. West made his home in Monrovia, Cal. recently, but had been on a visit to Florida, and was coming to Chicago by way of Washington, when he died.

DWIGHT BOWLES DIES

Was Son of Sam Bowles, Late Editor, Springfield (Mass.) Republican

Dwight W. Bowles, 61, secretary of the tentative organization of the International Press Foundation, and son of the late Samuel Bowles, II, editor of the Springfield (Mass.) Republican, died in Jacksonville, Fla., Feb. 2.

After he was graduated from Harvard College in 1887, Mr. Bowles spent several years in newspaper work, serving on the New York Times and the Chicago Inter-Ocean. Later he was engaged in the advertising business in New York. He went to Florida last spring to become acting general secretary of the International Press Foundation, being organized by Charles D. Haines.

Leigh Hunt Wilson Dead

Leigh Hunt Wilson, who died suddenly in New York, Feb. 2, held executive positions on many newspapers before entering publicity work in 1914. He was formerly managing editor of the Boston Journal and Boston Traveler, news editor of the Boston American, Chicago American, and Los Angeles Examiner. During the war he served in the Food and Fuel Administrations.

Boston Agency President Dead

John Buchanan, for many years on the editorial staff of the Boston Globe, recently in charge of an insurance department on the Boston Transcript and head of the John Buchanan Advertising Agency, Boston, died suddenly Jan. 27, in an automobile while on the way to his home in Quincy, Mass. Born in Edinburgh, Scotland, in 1871, he came to this country many years ago and had been employed on the Boston Globe the greater part of the time since. He was a member and former president of the Boston Press Club, a member of the Newspaper Club, the Veteran Journalists' Association and other newspaper organizations.

MARCUS H. ROGERS

Pioneer Massachusetts Country Publisher Dies After Long Service

Marcus H. Rogers, 90, widely known Berkshire publisher and a pioneer in country journalism, died in Springfield, Mass., Jan. 30.

At 14 he published on a hand-made press The Rising Sun. His first real venture in the publishing field came several years later when he went to Great Barrington, Mass., and became editor of the Berkshire Courier. In 1875 he attended the first World's Fair in Vienna, returning to resume editorship of the paper until 1879, when he disposed of his interests to the late Clark W. Bryan, of Springfield.

The next few years were spent in travel and in 1887, the publisher of the Berkshire Eagle having died, Mr. Rogers came to Pittsfield and took possession of the paper. Here he installed many innovations, changing the paper from its old blanket form of 10 columns, to eight pages of seven columns each. Some years ago he disposed of this paper to continue his travels.

Ford Motor Company Given Exclusive Right to Familiar Ford Script —Burlen Heads Committee Preparing A. N. A. Program —Auto Firm Changes Name

FEDERAL Judge A. N. Hand in an opinion handed down Feb. 2, sustained the right of the Ford Motor Company to the exclusive use of the name of "Ford" in the type or script made familiar through advertisements. The suit was instituted for an injunction pending trial by the Ford concern against the Fiske Brothers Refining Company, which sells motor oils.

In his opinion Judge Hand said that it did not seem necessary to consider whether the complainant had a valid trade-mark in the name "Ford," but that for years it had been used in script of a certain type and designated the complainant's goods. The opinion read in part:

"In 1914 complainant protested against the use of this name by defendant in connection with the sales of oil. In 1915 complainant is said to have acquiesced in the use of the words, 'Fiske's Motor Car Oils for Ford Cars.' There is no evidence, however, that this acquiesence covered the use of the word 'Ford' in script in the form employed by the complainant on its goods and in its advertising.

"The use of the Ford name in such a way that the public may suppose that the defendant's merchandise is in some way related to the complainant's product is unfair trade."

W. K. Burlen, advertising director of the New England Confectionery Company, Boston, has been appointed chairman of the program committee arranging for the May convention of the Association of National Advertisers to be held this year in Chicago, Robert K. Leavitt, association secretary, announced this week, from the New York office.

Other members of the committee are. E. T. Hall, vice-president of the Ralston Purina Company, St. Louis, and association president; O. C. Harn, National Lead Company; Carl Gazeley, of the Yawman & Erbe Company, Rochester; A. H. Ogle, of the Wahl Pen Company, Chicago; Kenyon Stevenson, Armstrong Cork Company, Lancaster, Pa.; K. L. Zimmerman, Henry Disston & Sons, Inc., Philadelphia; and P. B. Zimmerman, National Lamp Works of the General Electric Company, Cleveland, O.

The name of the Nordyke & Marmon Company, of Indianapolis, has been changed to the Marmon Motor Car Company. Officials remain unchanged.

The Radio Corporation of America reported a gross income of $50,405,144 for 1925. Net income was $5 737,206.

Henry J. Fuller, chairman of the board and president of Rolls-Royce of America, Inc., announced this week that sales of the company had been larger in 1925 than at any previous period and that orders were being received at double the rate of a year ago.

The Gordon-Van Tine Company, Davenport, Ia., building supply manufacturers and makers of ready-cut lumber for homes and garages, at its annual meeting last week reported a record business in its history, reaching $7,000,000. The company is claimed to be the largest advertising concern in the state, using 24 magazines as well as large local newspaper copy. Horace G. Roberts was elected president to succeed Ed C. Roberts, who asked to be relieved from the position after 19 years' service.

The Canadian National Clay Products Association at its recent annual meeting in Toronto decided to co-operate with the Common Brick Association of America in putting on in Canada an advertising campaign to influence the public to use brick in building to a larger extent. A committee was formed for the purpose and an assessment will be levied on members to finance the campaign.

E. J. Denker, formerly advertisng manager for Republic Motor Truck Company, Alma, Michigan has resigned as advertising manager for Foley & Co., Chicago, and took up his new duties Feb. 1 with W. M. Welch Mfg. Co., Chicago, makers of school supplies, laboratory and scientific apparatus.

Net profit of the B. F. Goodrich Company for the year ended Dec. 31, 1925, was about $16,700,000, according to the company's preliminary statement announced this week.

RAILROAD ADVERTISING

Gen. Atterbury, President of "Pennsy" Discusses Possible Campaign

Gen. W. W. Atterbury, president of the Pennsylvania Railroad, addressing the Advertising Club of New York, Feb. 3, declared he was hopeful that "within the near future" his company would embark on a plan of paid national advertising. He called upon club members for assistance in working out plans "along novel lines."

"I am not only a great believer in telling the public what we are doing and especially telling the public what a railroad is doing, but I am also a firm believer in straight-away advertising," he said.

"When we start our advertising campaign I want to invite the co-operative interest of the whole advertising fraternity."

The Pennsylvania Railroad, he pointed out, has not been advertising in other than "almost an inaudible manner" for a great many years.

"Now that we are about to embark upon an advertising campaign," he concluded, "we feel conditions warrant our approaching the subject from an entirely new angle."

WESTERN CLUBS TO MEET

Delegates from 7 States to Attend 11th District Meet in Pueblo

Representatives of advertising clubs of six western states, Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, Montana, New Mexico, Nevada and Arizona, will attend the district convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, to be held at Pueblo, Col., Feb. 22-24.

R. H. Faxon of Denver, is chairman of the general committee. He is assisted in plans for the convention by A. Boon McCallum, Denver, E. K. Hartzell, Boulder, F. H. Scheid, Colorado Springs, W. M. Williams, Greeley, P. H. Philbin, Jr. and Morris Townsend, both of Pueblo and F. E. J. Ronsholdt of Boulder, president of the district clubs.

Pres. C. K. Woodbridge of the Associated Clubs, W. F. McClure, Chicago and Reginald Colley, field secretary, will be speakers at the convention. It is expected also that Chancellor Heber R. Harper of the University of Denver and Charles C. Gates, Denver Manufacturer, will be on the program.

ADVERTISING AGENCY AFFAIRS

S. L. Smith Joins Staff of H. B. Humphrey Company, Boston—Cadwallader Sells Interest in San Antonio Agency—L. J. Hannah & Co., Chicago, Organized

SHERMAN LEWIS SMITH, for the past five years advertising manager of the Linscott Motor Company, Boston, has resigned to join the staff of the H. B. Humphrey Company, Boston advertising agency.

S. L. Smith

Mr. Smith gained recognition in advertising circles by his successful campaign on the front pages of Boston newspapers, called "Linscott Reo-Grams" that have appeared daily with few omissions since March, 1921. They have become familiar throughout the New England territory, being copied by Reo dealers elsewhere.

He is an active member of the Board of directors of the Advertising Club of Boston, and has taken part in work of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World. For two years he served as chairman of his club's church advertising committee.

Les Hannah for the past three years manager of the Campbell-Ewald Company, Chicago, has resigned to form the L. J. Hannah & Co., Inc., new advertising agency, with offices in the Tribune Tower, Chicago.

The following former members of the Campbell-Ewald Company have also resigned to join Mr. Hannah in his new enterprise: Norman D. Eckliff, assistant manager; Samuel S. Sherman, account executive: Harold McGuire, account executive; and C. Brooks Middleton, copy chief and account executive.

Prior to becoming associated with Campbell-Ewald, Mr. Hannah was general manager and part owner of the Hannah-Crawford Advertising Agency, Milwaukee. At one time he was also an account executive with the Klau-Van-Petersom-Dunlap Advertising Agency, Milwaukee.

A. H. Cadwallader, Jr., has sold his interest in the San Antonio, Tex., advertising agency of Cadwallader, Coulter & Payne to Robert G. Coulter and John B. Payne, who will continue the business under the name of Coulter & Payne. Cadwallader left the advertising business to become president of the American Building Company, San Antonio.

Gilbert E. Malone has joined the service staff of Dorrance, Sullivan & Co., Inc., New York advertising agency. Mr. Malone has been connected for many years with the Tin Decorating Company, Baltimore.

The business of the John Buchanan Advertising Agency, Boston, will be carried on by Arthur D. Grose, following the recent death of John Buchanan. Mr. Grose has been Mr. Buchanan's associate for the past four years and in compliance with Mr. Buchanan's wishes and those of his family Mr. Grose will continue the business. The family of Mr. Buchanan will continue their interest in the firm.

Allen Pepperell Ames, president of Ames and Morr, Inc., New York advertising agency, spoke before the Lawrence (Mass.) Chamber of Commerce Jan. 28 on "The Advantages of Resale Price Legislation."

Charles H. Bird has opened an advertising agency in Glendale, Cal., and with him are associated Frank Greene, commercial artist, and Arthur C. Streib, photographer.

Effective on and after Feb. 7, Dorrance, Sullivan & Co., Inc., are transferring the accounts of the Fitzgerald Manufacturing Co., Torrington, Conn., Smith & Wesson, Springfield, Mass., and the Safe-T-Stat Co., of Brooklyn, N. Y., to the advertising firm of Mason-Sullivan, Inc., of 270 Madison avenue, New York, who will complete all existing contracts for these three clients.

The above transfer is being made in connection with the resignation of George L. Sullivan, as vice-president of Dorrance, Sullivan & Co., Inc., to become president of the new firm of Mason-Sullivan, Inc. Mr. Sullivan's retirement in no way affects any accounts other than the above, handled by Dorrance, Sullivan & Co., Inc. The name and personnel remain unchanged.

Jack Horner, president of the Horner-Roper Advertising Agency, Inc., of Long Beach, Cal., was recently elected a director of the Long Beach Advertising Club.

Derek White has taken charge of the office of the James Houlihan, Inc., advertising agency in Portland, Ore. He was formerly connected with the Oakland office of that company.

L. J. Stahl, formerly a free-lance artist and late of the art department of Barrows and Richardson, has joined the art department of the Corman Company, Inc., New York advertising agency.

A new course on the principles of advertising will be given by the extension division of Washington University, St. Louis, by Daniel A. Ruebel, vice-president of the Chappelow Advertising Company, former president of the Advertising Club of St. Louis and chairman of the educational committee of the club.

Larry Lynch who has been the manager of the Orlando, Fla., office of the Lesan-Carr Advertising Agency, has joined the staff of the Orlando Chamber of Commerce.

REPORTERS CAN'T BE DEPUTIES

Wisconsin Governor Bars News Men as County Sheriff's Aids

Gov. J. J. Blaine of Wisconsin has asked county sheriffis to cease the practice of swearing newspaper men in as deputy sheriffs without salary following publication of a story by Herman P. Lochner, police reporter for the Madison Capital Times which Gov. Blaine declared Lochner, as a county officer, had no right to divulge. It concerned granting requisitions for prisoners.

Lochner was called before the governor and asked the source of the information presented in the story. He refused to give it and relinquished his deputy's badge.

In a statement to newspapers anent the Lochner interview Gov. Blaine said, in part: "It was highly improper for him, in a private capacity as reporter, to write articles in relation to an official matter or a public office of which he was a part. He should understand that he was an officer of the court, and that he had no right to exploit his official position for his private gain or the gain of a newspaper."

Editorially, the Capital Times backed up the reporter and attacked the Governor's attitude.

Use the Home Papers

Confidence in the immediate outlook for business has been fortified by the vigorous advance in various branches of trade and industry since the first of the year.

It is probable that factors have never before combined to produce a level of consumers' purchasing power so high and so evenly distributed as at present. This situation has been demonstrated many times during the last year or more and is rightly regarded as providing an excellent basis for the continuance of general business activity on a considerable scale.

This is encouraging to the distributor of merchandise, particularly as the transportation accommodations of this unusually level state cannot be surpassed in any other part of the country.

For Mass Appeal in PENNSYLVANIA Use the Daily Newspapers

The vast army of workingmen in Pennsylvania consists of many groups of which hundreds of thousands are skilled artisans. They are a discriminating buying public and have faith in merchandise that is of sufficient standard to warrant national advertising.

The wants of the Pennsylvania farmers are varied and they rely on their nearest buying center for the fulfilment of their wants. They constitute another important group of consumers that are of great importance to the manufacturer.

A recognized authority on advertising has advised, "When you have a mass appeal, use the newspapers." The Pennsylvania people have a strong bond in common and that is their faith and pride in their daily newspapers. The papers are delivered into their homes and are thoroughly read. They are an influence in the home that includes guidance in the purchase of necessities and luxuries for Dad, Mother, the boys, the girls and the kiddies.

For the benefit of National Advertisers, the Pennsylvania daily newspapers offer co-operation in merchandising and sales promotion that virtually eliminates uncertainty of results for a product of real merit.

Colleen Moore to Play "Ella Cinders" on Screen—United Features and Conde Nast to Co-operate—Barbour Made General Manager of McClure Newspaper Syndicate

FIRST NATIONAL PICTURES has purchased the moving picture rights of "Ella Cinders," comic strip by William M. Conselman and Charles P. Plumb, launched last June by the Metropolitan Newspaper Service, New York. Colleen Moore is to play the title role, according to present plans.

The adaptation and continuity for the film will be done by Mr. Conselman, and the characters made familiar to readers by Plumb's pencil will be reproduced on the screen—Ella; her little brother Blackie; Mr. Cinders, the mean stepmother; Lottie and Prissie Pill, the envious step-sisters; O. Watters Neck; Cyril Sweetie; Waite Lifter; J. Wallington Whiffle (Pa Cinders) the Movie Producer, and all the others. Production is to start at once.

Mr. Conselman and Mr. Plumb are both alumni of the Los Angeles Times.

An agreement has been reached between the United Press Associations and the Conde Nast Publications, Inc., under which the United Feature Syndicate and the Conde Nast Newspaper Service will carry on their respective activities on a co-operative basis, using a common sales force, Howard Wheeler, vice-president and general manager of the former syndicate, announced this week.

"The United Feature Syndicate and the Conde Nast Newspaper Service have in no way merged or combined," Mr. Wheeler explained. "The two institutions have entered into a co-operative arrangement, whereby each will retain its entire identity and present editorial organization, but will carry on sales and promotion jointly."

According to the arrangement, Mr. Wheeler will have general supervision of production and sale of the Conde Nast features, working in close association with the editorial organizations of Vogue, House and Garden, Vanity Fair, the Nast publications. The two offices will be maintained, the Conde Nast Newspaper Service being located at 19 W. 44th street, New York, and United Feature Syndicate, at 63 Park Row.

Miss M. T. Bristor, who was with Mr. Wheeler in the McClure Newspaper Syndicate, specializing in promotion and fiction, has joined the Nast syndicate and will co-operate with United in the production and promotion of Nast features.

New features that have been originated under the co-operative agreement, and which are now being put on the market include "Beauty Talks," daily and Sunday, conducted by Francesca van de Kley, managing editor of Vogue; "Towne's Town," daily New York letter, by Charles Hanson Towne; "How to be Happy Though Civil," conducted by Caroline Duer, sister of Alice Duer Miller, novelist; "That Dog of Yours," weekly, by Robert S. Lemmon; "The Adequately Dressed Man," tri-weekly; and a household service written by contributors to House and Garden. The Vogue daily fashion news service will be continued and improved.

Irwin Barbour, formerly Pacific Coast manager of the McClure Newspaper Syndicate, has been made general manager, succeeding Howard Wheeler, resigned, and will make his headquarters in New York.

Mr. Barbour has been on the Pacific Coast for McClure for the past two and a half years. Prior to that he was general manager of the Wheeler Syndicate, which was recently sold to Major Malcolm Wheeler-Nicholson. In 1921 and 1922, he opened up branch offices for the McClure Newspaper Syndicate in London and Sydney, Australia.

Before entering the syndicate field, Mr. Barbour gained distinction in the editorial side of daily newspaper work. Starting as reporter in 1909 on the Washington Post, he later became associated with the Washington Herald, holding the positions of city editor, telegraph editor, and news editor on that paper. He has also worked for the Savannah Morning News, the New York American, International News Service, and Universal Service.

Joe Williams, sports editor of the Cleveland Press, is now writing a series, under the heading of "Haymakers That Made History," for NEA Service clients.

Hal Cochran, NEA Service poet and special writer, now is turning out a daily column under the title of "The Very Idea."

An anthology of the "Best Short Stories," selected by the editors of 16 magazines at the invitation of the New York World, is being offered by the New York World Syndicate. Undertaken for the first time in 1925, the stories thus selected were published in the World and 30 other newspapers and later issued in book form by the George H. Doran Company. This year each magazine editor was asked to name the five stories he published during the year that he best. From these one story, consi the best adapted to newspaper use, selected by a committee of news editors, headed by John O'Hara grave, Sunday editor of the World.

Amelita Galli-Curci, operatic star written a series on her adventures ar the world for the Cosmos News Syndicate, New York.

"Putting You in Youth," by Ji De Forest, trainer, is announced b New York World Syndicate, as a series of articles on diet, exercise health. During the life of the series De Forest will answer queries sent newspaper readers.

Edgar Poe Norris is author of " Two Lovers," his third novel writte rectly for newspaper serialization, distributed by the Central Press A ation, Cleveland.

H. B. Broughan has joined the staff of the Cosmos Newspaper S cate, New York, and is now on a of the east coast and the south. also representing the Fisher Index, nancial service for newspapers.

Miss Elsa Umla, office manager o Post Syndicate, New York, was ma recently to Thomas M. Byrne, mal editor of the New York Evening Mrs. Byrne plans to continue her s cate work.

Norman E. Brown, sports editor o Central Press Association, is ill Cleveland hospital with an attack of trouble. He is reported improving.

Olga Samaroff, noted pianist and poser, is writing a weekly music which is being distributed by the Syndicate. Miss Samaroff condu music column for the New York Ev Post.

From the Linotype Mailbag

"Mighty Fine Service"

"We were certainly very much pleased with the way in which you took care of our order for motor for Linotype machine. It was about 9.15 Tuesday evening when Mr. Burkert told me that the motor burned out. As you know, we have a Mergenthaler ordered from you which is on the way and we are running right up to capacity on all our machines every day. To lose the output of even one machine for a day would have been quite a hardship, and that was why we called you Tuesday night.

"The motor was in our office at 9.15 Wednesday morning and we want the world to know that this was mighty fine service on your part and surely is appreciated by us."

Dirty Work at the Dock

Mouse, Thought to Be a Brick-Throwing Ignatz, Runs Up the Clock Causing Reign of Terror—Police Reporter Hops on It for an Extra

By CHET JOHNSON

DESK SERGEANT (Answering 'phone): P'leece stayshun!

VOICE AT OTHER END: Help! This is the operator at Dickory, Dickory Dock! A mouse just ran up our clock! Oh, please do something! Hurry!

SERGEANT: Awright, sister. Comin' right up!

REPORTER: Anything doin', Sergeant?

SERGEANT: Mouse just run up a clock at Dickory, Dickory Dock.

REPORTER: Attaboy! Anybody killed?

SERGEANT: Dunno yet. Hey, Murphy, send a riot squad to the dock. Better take a machine gun and some tear gas bombs along. Moriarity, go tell the captain of detectives. He may wanta send a loada dicks down there.

REPORTER: Lookin' for a battle, Sergeant?

SERGEANT: Can't tell. Gotta play safe. This mouse may be that brick thrower, Ignatz.

REPORTER: Guess I'd better let 'em know about this at the office. They may wanta get out an extra. Hello! Hello! Hey, operator, whatsamatter? Gimme Black 'n Blue eight three five two an' a half. . . Yeah, that's it! . . . 'Lo, Amelia, gimme the city desk. 'Lo, Bill! Say, gotta good one for yuh. Mouse just ran uppa clock at Dickory, Dickory Dock. Yeah, big crowd there. Coupla hundred women fainted an' got trampled on. Cops think the mouse may be Ignatz. Better hop on that one, Bill. Unnerstand the opposition's gonna play it for bull lines all over page one. You know the ol' panic stuff. Women screamin', kids bein' knocked down, an' all that. Huh? Yeah, I gotta call in for him. Sure, I'll have a statement from him in a coupla minutes. (Hangs up.)

SERGEANT: Gotta good story?

REPORTER: I'll say. . . . Hello! Hello! Hey, operator, whatsmatter? Gimme Mauve three seven six four an' three-eights. . . . Hello . . . gimme the city health officer. Whatsat? . . . This is the Mayor's office, an' I wanta speak to the doctor right away. . . . 'Lo, this you Doc? Say, a mouse just run up a clock at Dickory Dickory Dock. I wanta statement from you on it. Any chance of this mouse havin' bubonic plague? Huh? You don't know, huh? Fine. If this is a bubonic mouse 't may cause an epidemic, aint that right? No? Good. Lissen, Doc, in case this mouse causes a plague, how 'bout a gran' jury investigation to find out how he happened to crawl offa ship tied up there? Don't think there's any danger, huh? Good stuff, Doc. Much 'bliged. G'bye.

SERGEANT: Say, I never thought about the boobonic plague. Maybe I'd better do somethin' else. Corp'ral, call Central Emergency an' tell 'em they better send a coupla ambulances an' some nurses an' doctors down to the dock. You might hint to 'em to have a ward or two ready in case anybody already has this here boobonic plague stuff. I don't know much about it, but I guess it's deadly stuff, aint it?

REPORTER: Yeah. Kills everybody within a hundred miles sometimes. . . . Hello! Hello! Hey operator, whatsamatter? Gimme Black 'n Blue eight three five two an' a half, again; I been waitin' half an hour. . . . 'Lo, Amelia, gimme the city desk again. 'Lo, Bill. Say, the health officer says this mouse may cause the worst bubonic plague in hist'ry. He's chasin' right down there. Wants to know why they let this mouse get offa ship. The pleece just sent down ambulances an' doctors an' Central Emergency's ready to handle the first victims. Lissen, Bill, le's hop on this heavy an' start a campaign to have all clocks equipped with mouse traps! An' don't forget the grand jury angle. Maybe we ought to send a wire to Washington an' demand some action by Congress, huh? Awright. I'll call in again soon as I get any more dope.

SERGEANT: Say, I wonder . . . maybe I ought to notify the state constabulary. Harrigan, run over an' tell 'em about this.

And at the Daily Blah Office

CITY EDITOR: Hey, kid; go out an' tell the make-up editor to tear up page one and leave about four full columns for a big mouse story. Jones, write me 'bout a column about bubonic plague. Smith, never mind that story. Hop on this. . . . Here's my notes. . . . Gimme a snappy lead on this story right away. Tell the art department to rush a big layout picture of the city with a big mouse ready to pounce down an' eat it. Have 'em getta coupla good lookers from the business office pullin' up their skirts an' standin' on a chair with a mouse tryin' to get at 'em. Joe, gimme an eight column hundred an' twenty point line, a three column seventy-two point drop an a coupla twenty-four point decks. Smoke it up. Somethin' like "City Periled by Bubonic Plague; Diseased Mouse Creates Panic on Dickory, Dickory Dock; Hundreds of Women Faint as Monster Runs Amuck," an' all that sorta thing.

Back at Police Headquarters

SERGEANT: (Answering 'phone): Pleece stayshun. Watsat? Oh; 'lo, Murphy. What's doin' down there? Nothin', huh? What became of the mouse? Oh, zatso? Clock struck one an' he run down, huh? Any women faint or anything? Oh, just a lumber dock an nobody there but two stevedores an' the 'phone operator? Well, better c'mon in, I guess.

REPORTER: Rats! Another good yarn blown up! Well, I guess I won't call in until after they get the extras off an' then we can kill the yarn in the next edition. 'S a good story, at that.

MEMBERSHIP ACTION DELAYED

A. P. to Vote on Dallas Journal Application in April

Directors of the Associated Press will vote on the application of the Dallas (Tex.) Journal for membership at the next meeting in April, it was decided late last week, following discussion of the case at the board's January session in New York.

The Dallas Times-Herald is protesting the Journal's election.

Action was taken at the meeting on the application of the Panama City Daily Beacon, which is now an A. P. member. Jefferson Thomas is publisher.

"Unipress" in 3 Languages

The Spanish-language edition of Unipress, house organ of the United Press Associations, made its bow in Buenos Aires early in January. James I. Miller, vice-president of the United Press and general South American manager, cabled the New York office of the United Press that the first Portuguese-language edition would appear in Rio de Janeiro on Jan. 25. The first German-language edition of Unipress will appear next month in Berlin. The English edition of Unipress has been established for a number of years. It is believed that Unipress is the only American house organ that is published in three languages.

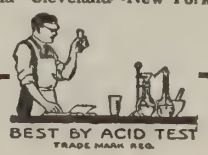
Thousands of Newspapers Now Depend on the Plus Plan

THE Imperial Plus Metal Plan has met with so much favor among newspaper publishers that today Imperial counts its users by the thousands. If the Plus Plan were restricted to large metropolitan newspapers or to small village weeklies, this growth would not have been possible. Neither would it have been possible if the Plus Plan did not render a definite, reliable and economical service for its users.

The Plus Plan was originated by specialists who know type metal and the problems that originate in the shops where type metals are used. It is a significant fact that the Imperial Type Metal Company makes just one product—type metals. Specializing on one product and its uses has enabled Imperial chemists to originate and put into operation the most successful plan ever devised to take care of type metals.



Imperial Plus Metal Plan constitutes a reliable method for keeping type metal in a continual state of balance. All elements of the metal are kept in the correct proportion. This means that a metal will have many more years of working life than a metal not using the Plus Plan. This economy and reliability have won thousands of publishers to the Plus Plan.

Defending Subscription Campaigns

To Editor & Publisher:- It is hardly conceivable that you would allow publication of such an article as the one on page 6 of your recent issue regarding subscription contests, especially when the inference drawn would indicate that the case cited is an average one.

My experience in this business dates back about fourteen years and I have never known a case where the publisher's regular subscription price was reduced during a contest. But I do know where the publisher was prevailed upon to increase his subscription rate. As for the thirty per cent commission rate used in the figures, you will find that publishers pay no higher than 25 per cent. and frequently lower. And, while 20 per cent. commission is sometimes paid to non-prize winners who remain active throughout a contest, the usual amount so paid is 10 per cent. However, this represents very little actual money to be paid in addition to the prize list—never approximating the total receipts, even by one-third.

On the whole, it would appear that those who are in engaged in the contest business are an unscrupulous lot—"leeches" as "A PUBLISHER" says.

By their actions, some of the most important publishers in the country show that they believe there is no substitute, in results gained, for the right kind of circulation contests. This is a matter of record and, as one engaged in this business, we prefer facts to someone's theories.

Correction

To Editor & Publisher:—You quote a veteran labor man on page 30 of your issue of Jan. 23, as saying that the only New York paper that makes labor a full time assignment is the New York World. This is an error. The Herald Tribune also makes labor a full time assignment.

Dwight S. Perrin,
City Editor, New York Herald Tribune.

Resisting Moochers

To Editor & Publisher: We want to commend your stand on the Mcochers of Free Publicity.

This paper has been bombarded with more schemes to put over free publicity and the wonderful way in which they think we will fall for their generous offers of the stuff is disgusting.

We have written many asking them to please remove our name from their sucker list.

The Longview (Tex.) Publishing Co.,
Alger Jones,
Advertising Manager.

An Encouraging Letter

To Editor & Publisher: When your office acknowledged my subscription to Editor & Publisher for this year, they sent me a card to mark, showing my classification as a reader. I have studied the card carefully and my classification is not listed, because I buy it for a peculiarly personal reason, which is that I find between its covers more red-blooded and lively romance than in any other publication I know. There comes to me each week from its pages, a vision of enterprise so fascinating that it serves as stimulant to imagination, and dulls with its reality, the romance of fiction.

There is no little square on that card in which I can put a check mark for classification.

I am,

H. M. Newman.

Forest Conservation

To Editor & Publisher: Your editorial headed "Forestry Grab" in the issue of Jan. 9, 1926, is fittingly followed by an italic line, "A little information is dangerous in print."

For the most part Editor & Publisher is full of valuable information, inspiring articles and worthwhile editorials, but the editorial which is mentioned in this letter certainly leaves the average reader with the impression that we of the West are not lovers of the outdoors, nor interested in the conservation of our rich heritage of natural resources.

We who live in the shadows of the Grand Tetons, who bask in the sunshine of the beautiful Gem State and watch the setting sun drop behind the inspiring Saw Tooth Range, love our land with all the fervor of an Easterner's love of ease and luxury.

We who live in this rugged, man-sized country also appreciate the value of our livestock industry, we know that of the uses to which our natural resources may be put, that stock raising takes away far less of our heritage than agriculture, mining or forestry.

Apparently it is news to you that grazing has been allowed in our national forests for years; that the stockmen are for the most part only asking reasonable assurance of the continuity of their permits, much as we who live by publishing endeavor to safeguard our investment through contracts for press services, rentals, and wage scales.

If you will obtain a copy of the 1925 report of Secretary of Agriculture W. M. Jardine, turn to page 83 and read and study the text up to and including the second paragraph on page 89, you will have a clearer understanding of the subject which you have treated in one brief paragraph, leaving those unfamiliar with the subject a gripping fear that a "gift" is about to be made to the livestock men of the West.

If you possess special information which convinces you that a fraud is about to be perpetrated then you will be doing us who live in the West a service in elaborating. If the secretary's report throws new light upon the subject then that deserves a hearing.

In passing, may we add, that the forests which you mention are jealously guarded by the agricultural interests of the West, for forests protect the watersheds from which flow throughout the growing season the bloom-producing waters that fill our irrigation canals and ditches, guaranteeing the bumper yields of potatoes, beets and other products for which the West is noted.

A. Ross Rutherford,
Idaho Falls (Idaho) Daily Post.

Editor's Note: Editor & Publisher appreciates criticism. The editorial in question was based upon the belief, shared by the American Forestry Association and many others interested in conservation of natural resources, that the stockmen are seeking a transfer of the national forests from public control and the adoption of a system of leases that would be tantamount to private ownership; the logic of the cattlemen's proposal carries, in our opinion, directly to commercial exploitation and consequent injury to future lumber and water supply.

Short Rates and Rebates

To Editor & Publisher:- Referring to the article in your Jan. 16 issue—"Agency Practices on Short Rates and Rebates Criticised," I am sure that those agencies conducting their affairs on a business-like basis and with some foresight readily agree that criticism of this practice complained of is wholly justified.

Unfortunately, there are still agencies that, while selling "prestige" and "good will" for others, seem to fail utterly to realize that "prestige" and "good will" are of equal value to them in their business. Any attempt to take unfair advantage of a publisher is very short-sighted and, I believe, injures the agency following such a policy far more than it can possibly produce benefit. Friction is always costly and these things produce friction. Confidence is an essential to sound business relations—and these practices undermine confidence.

But don't hang all the agencies because of this. Those who are earnestly conducting their affairs under a broad business-like policy, suffer from the acts of the short-sighted. Unfortunately, it is still too easy to "go into the agency game." Too many publishers and other owners of advertising media are too quick to endorse a contract rather than an organization and its fitness to function as an advertising agency.

Perhaps the publishers, in suffering from the practices complained of, are suffering from things for which they are partly responsible. The agency that sells its client on the basis that it has a bag full of tricks which enables it to get low rates from the publishers, is most often the agency that never should have been endorsed by the publishers.

I feel impelled to sound this note because it is a good thing to keep this thought before the publishers constantly and whenever criticism of agency operation is made.

Listing Linage Records

To Editor & Publisher:- The newspapers are to be congratulated upon the linage records published in your issue of Jan. 9, on page 5. I think you are also to be congratulated on the interesting and forceful manner in which these figures are presented.

You will, I feel sure, not take exception to my pointing out one or two details of this tabulation which make some papers appear at a disadvantage.

Take our own case for example. Our morning edition appears as fiftieth in one classification and our evening paper is listed under papers having thirteen issues per week where it appears as sixteenth under this wrong classification. Our proper place would have been seventh position among the papers with thirteen issues per week.

This is particularly bad for us as we sell national space only in combination. Besides, it has been our invariable rule in publishing linage figures to use the combined figures.

It is true that in forwarding figures to your office, we also separated them into morning, evening and Sunday as our statistical department could not tell from your inquiry just what compilations you wanted to make but it seems to me that the way you have grouped the papers we are certainly out of position and deprived of a standing to which we are fully entitled.

I note also that your listing runs together some of the thirteen issue papers and some of the straight evening and morning papers. This leads me to wonder if you are possibly going to republish these records. If so, we would certainly prefer to be listed among the papers of thirteen issues per week.

I want also to take this occasion to say that in my own opinion the columns of EDITOR & PUBLISHER are growing constantly more interesting to the newspaper man and more full of really valuable material.

Syndicate Ideals

TO EDITOR & PUBLISHER: The publication in the EDITOR & PUBLISHER of January 23 of a report on Syndicates, made by Mr. Marvin W. Creager to the convention of the American Society of Newspaper Editors, suggested to me that I might be permitted to submit the results of some of my observations after over seven years as Editor-in-Chief of a newspaper syndicate.

I am particularly desirous of contributing my impressions for whatever they may be worth, because Mr. Creager's report seems to me the most constructive, helpful and hopeful that has yet appeared in print—and the more valuable that it is not the judgment of a sentimentalist or theorist, but of a man who for years has had all the facts at his disposal, and who has had to strike some kind of a working compromise between advantages and disadvantages.

There is no mental loop-the-loop that can create as alienating a curve as a vicious circle. An editor decides that it is his duty and privilege to find, develop and present, at least some of the features that he publishes in his paper. He finds, a woman say, in his own office or his own town, who has an untrained knack for writing married life serials. He puts at least as much time and thought and ten times the experience, that she contributes, into training her. He, practically, makes a success of her. No sooner has her popularity become a definite quantity than she goes to the syndicates or the syndicates come to her, and it has not been unknown that her product should be offered to the editor, who has in part created her, for a large price, on threat of a rival paper being eager to "cash in" on the publicity she has had in her home town. Incidentally, most syndicates consider it a point of ethics that her own paper should retain her at whatever figure may be agreed between the author and the editor without profit to the syndicate. But, her exclusiveness of course cannot be retained.

Meeting this situation from the other side of the circle comes the syndicate. Its struggles as I have done frequently itself, with writers of international fame and of no fame at all, until the product forms right for the newspaper market, which is so highly specialized that no book or magazine experience helps beyond a certain point—except of course when there is such a demand for the name that material is of third rate importance. Following the development and presentation of the new feature comes the creating of an expensive publicity campaign—not, mark you, to convince a few million readers of the value of what they are getting for a few cents a day, but to convince the editor that the feature is worth buying at a price that will pay for the author's time, the publicity campaign, and the earnest young man sitting opposite the editor and taking up his time because the initial campaign that went through the mail was ignored. Should the editor be persuaded to buy this feature by an unknown or fairly known writer, the chances are that it will be "sneaked" into his paper, in an inconspicuous, humble way, and it will be up to the readers to find it, adopt it, make it a habit, and thereby a success. The blare of trumpets, the bugle calls, the heralds and the waving of flags that we call publicity have all been expended on the editor to persuade him to open the door a meager inch and let the visitor through unannounced, and frequently unwelcomed. And in this vicious circle there is no one to blame, unless it be a system which is daily being modified and changed.

Among the changes that have impressed me most in the last few years is the attitude toward big names. They still have a disproportionate value, but every year the editorial eye is resting more keenly on the quality of the material signed by these big names. A lessening in the standard almost immediately brings enquiring or indignant letters from editors—and the syndicate editor has to "go to the mat" with a name that a few years earlier was above criticism. There was a time when such conferences were of a delicacy that partook of the dexterity of a prize ice skater and the skill of a toe dancer. But already the good circle as opposed to the vicious circle has been formed, because in this matter the syndicate is backed by its newspaper editors and the editors supported by the syndicate. I could report conversations and show letters and cables of bomb-like force, wasting no words and shading no meanings, from syndicates to names that flash in the milky way of newspaper stars. And the net result has been toward better understanding and finer work, which brings us to a word that thrills the hearts of sentimentalists, and makes the practical man shiver in his shoes—Cooperation.

Cooperation, when it is offered instead of everything else that has stood the test of time in business, seems to me a bad bet. Cooperation, plus all other business assets, and particularly plus competition appeals to me as the hope of the world in general, and the only hope that syndicates may mean to newspaper what they should and what they want to mean.

If I had been the recipient of any substantial portion of the late Mr. Munsey's wealth, I should try an experiment. I refer to Mr. Munsey's wealth because I think it would take considerable financial backing to make my experiment—no matter how succesful the ultimate result might be.

I should create a syndicate, very much on the present day lines, except that it would be less hurried, and would be willing to pass by the quick turn-over that comes from paying enormous sums for a political or briefly sensational feature. I am not criticising these. I would simply leave them to the other fellow, because I believe that this age of specializing has now reached syndicates, and that the attempt of each syndicate to handle everything must obviously cease. I would concentrate on two things—finding new talent and trying to train it for newspaper feature use, and finding new subjects for known writers. The syndicate, as middleman with its ear to the ground, should overflow with suggestions to picked writers. This is done, but too occasionally. More frequently the syndicate is trying to persuade an editor of the value of material that was never written or intended for his market.

When I had exercised my best judgment and that of my associates in the securing of samples of the new talent, and suggestions to the known names, I should want to approach my editors individually, still in a highly competitive market, as a partner, submitting the first part of his share in a mutual obligation—the obligation of obtaining the best possible feature material for the readers of newspapers. I should hope that the editor, approving, modifying, discarding, agreeing what would be a fair territory price in the first, second and third years of a continuous feature, if retained, would then be willing to share my gamble and consider it his in relation to the reading public. In other words—the smallest possible amount of salesmanship to sell the editor, and the greatest possible amount of salesmanship to sell the public.

If I could quote names of features and editors I could give a few interesting examples of where this has been done—a few editors cooperating from the first in giving and getting the greatest possible publicity for a feature that they thought of exceptional value. From this point it would be but a step to that ideal condition in which editors all over the country would suggest from time to time new features to syndicates, selecting in each case the syndicate from which they had obtained the best service, or which was specializing in their requirement of the moment. And if there are too many syndicates the remedy is in the hands of newspaper editors, and newspaper editors and publishers only—the elimination of the unfit, or the less fit, or the too many will meet the fate of the Florida lots that cannot be found at high tide—the wise purchaser patronizes the lots that are always on dry land.

Even when the syndicate situation was at its worst, a couple of years back, and certain practices were rampant among a few syndicates that were bound to earn the disapproval of newspapers, I pinned my faith in an ultimate understanding mainly on one fact—we were all the same kind of people; writers, artists, reporters—newspaper men and women. In so closely related a family fights might be inevitable, but, at least, the victory would have to be mutual.

FARM PAGE AS NECESSARY AS SPORT NEWS AND BUILDS GOOD WILL

Mid-Western Editors Employing Full-Time Men to Prepare Agricultural News Working With County Agents and Farmers Themselves—Pleases Readers

By M. V. BRIGGS

"WE run a daily farm page because we have a large body of farmer readers who are as much entitled to farm news as sports followers are to the sports page."

Thus Verne Marshall, managing editor of the Cedar Rapids (Ia.) Gazette, sums up the reason why his paper devotes nearly a page daily to news of the farm and rural social activities, employing a full-time man to conduct the department.

A number of daily newspapers in Iowa, as well as in several other states where agriculture is the principal industry, have found the farm page the solution to the problem of creating good will among farmers and small town residents.

I believe Iowa has progressed further in this field than any other state. H. J. Metcalf, of the Iowa State College of Agriculture, says there are 20 daily papers of that state running farm news, either daily or weekly.

In 1919 I was on the editorial staff of the Waterloo (Ia.) Tribune and proposed a farm page as a means of stimulating circulation in the rural districts served by the Tribune. It was entirely an experiment with the Tribune, in fact so far as we were able to ascertain it was an untried project in the state.

The page was a weekly affair made up chiefly of service stories. Local touches were given the page by news from the county agricultural agent's office and in frequent stories sent in by farmers.

The following year the Waterloo Evening Courier and the Des Moines Register started farm pages on a bigger scale. The Courier engaged a young man, a graduate from the state college agricultural journalism school, to devote his entire time to gathering news in the 12 or 14 counties in the paper's territory. He was furnished with a car to enable him to attend important farmer meetings and some four columns a day were given over to his use. The Register hooked its farm page up with advertising and succeeded in obtaining considerable livestock linage.

The Courier still maintains a full-time farm editor, with car, and its publishers speak very highly of the results, noted chiefly in the good will obtained which in turn favorably reflects on circulation.

Soon after the Courier and Register began publishing the farm pages the Iowa State College of Agriculture engaged Mr. Metcalf to establish a farm publicity department and organize, or rather interest, daily and weekly papers of the state in the use of news pertaining to the farm.

Mr. Metcalf traveled extensively and gathered material which was sent out as a weekly service to all papers requesting it. He was instrumental in getting 20 dailies and many weeklies to using farm news regularly and in addition to this started many of them off with special farm editions, more than 50 counties being covered in this way. Publicity schools, to which Farm Bureau leaders and newspaper publishers were invited, were also held in every district of the state.

Such, in brief, is the history of the farm page in Iowa.

Two years ago the Waterloo Tribune decided to put on a full-time farm editor. I was engaged to fill the job and while serving the Tribune for a year and a half I had an excellent opportunity to observe first hand the effect of such a department, its reaction on the advertising and circulation.

It was my observation that the farm page was a decided asset as a good will builder and on good will depends, to a large extent, circulation, especially in a field where competition is keen.

At that time the Tribune, a morning paper, was including 14 counties of Northeastern Iowa in its territory. With the exception of Waterloo and Oelwein all the towns in that territory were under 5,000 population, the majority of them being considerably below that figure.

Incidentally a part of my work was to organize a staff of correspondents, giving them some training and getting them to a point where our daily small town news would average a couple of columns at least. For those publishers who may be contemplating the establishing of a farm page I would suggest that the country correspondence work be combined with the farm work, especially the field end of it. Both departments, if properly organized and conducted so as to produce best results, necessitates some travel and personal contact and the same man, with car, can handle both, thereby reducing expenses.

I began the farm news work by visiting the Farm Bureau agents of each county in the Tribune territory.

As soon as the county agents began mailing schedules of coming meetings I made up a date book and attended the more important, covering them thoroughly for my daily farm news department. Features, for which I took pictures, and the usual run of mail material were reserved for the weekly page spread. Later the weekly spread was discontinued and the daily department enlarged.

My real task was to get the farm folks themselves interested to the point where they would co-operate, it being a physical impossibility, as well as an expensive proceeding, for me to attend all meetings.

The first step in this direction was to send out a form letter to the township secretaries of the Farm Bureau organizations and farmers' clubs asking that they write or phone reports of the meetings and other activities. The response on this was very good.

On the farm page I ran a box inviting the farmers to use the farm news columns for expressing their views on any subject in which they were interested. I also invited questions. Here again I had a gratifying response.

Later a county publicity school was held. The farm editor of the Waterloo Evening Courier, and the Farm Bureau agent and home demonstration worker co-operated. Officers and publicity secretaries of all township organizations were invited. The Courier man and myself gave talks on what constitutes farm news and how to prepare it. That school was attended by all township leaders and the interest shown was keen. The farm people were taken through the Tribune plant and shown a newspaper in the making. The effect of the school was far reaching.

As evidence of the good will which a farm editor can build up for his paper I found that both the Courier man and myself were among the most welcome guests at all rural functions. Often I received invitations by toll phone and frequently I was included on the program. On such occasions I talked about the making of a newspaper and told of the desire of the Tribune to serve its farm readers as well as those of the city.

Perhaps some publishers have the mistaken idea that the daily paper, in running farm news, is competing with the agricultural journals. Nothing could be farther from the truth. The agricultural journal treats in a general and technical way, what the daily paper dishes up in a news way. The two fields are distinct.

The farm department, properly conducted, will prove a good will builder and an asset to any newspaper in an agricultural district, be the city's population anywhere between 10,000 and 200,000. It is no longer a theory but a proven reality that has opened the outside field to many a daily, boosting circulation and making friends for the paper.

New York Sun Starts "Hero Fund"

Making the first contribution of $500, the New York Sun this week started to raise a sum as a tribute to the heroism of the seamen who manned the boats of the President Roosevelt, participating in the rescue of 25 men aboard the foundering British freighter Antinoe last week. The fund is being administered and distributed by the Seamen's Church Institute, New York.

Don Marquis Weds Actress

Don Marquis, former New York newspaper columnist, was married Feb. 2 to Mrs. Marjorie Vonnegut, an actress. Mr. Marquis conducted columns in New York for 13 years, first the "Sun Dial" on the New York Sun, and later the "Lantern in the New York Herald Tribune. He is author of the successful play "The Old Soak." Mr. Marquis' first wife, Mrs. Reina Melcher Marquis, died two years ago. They had one child.

Serves One Paper 37 Years

George E. Briggs, editor-manager of the Peekskill (N. Y.) Highland Democrat, completed 37 consecutive years with the paper on Jan. 29. Mr. Briggs was re-elected president of the Highland Democrat Company at the annual meeting held last week. Colin T. Naylor, Jr., was chosen vice-president, Myra M. Briggs, secretary and Edward F. Hill, treasurer.

Fiery Cross on Editor's Lawn

District Judge C. W. Robinson at Houston, ordering the county grand jury to investigate the erection of a fiery cross on the lawn at the home of Marcellus E. The fiery cross was planted recently while Foster was attending a theatre.

PUBLISHER COMPLAINS AGAINST "FREE BUNK"

Hiner, Newcastle Courier, Urges Indiana Editorial Group to Be Thrifty With Their Space—McDermond Named President

Objecting to "the deluge of publicity" which is swamping the editor's mail bag, A. C. Hiner, Newcastle (Ind.) Courier, on Jan. 25 urged members of the Indiana Republican Editorial Association meeting at Indianapolis to polish up the old doctrine that advertising space should be for sale and not to give away.

"The spending of a dollar for newspaper advertising is no reason for giving away a like amount of space," he said. "The space of a newspaper is that paper's stock of goods the same as the merchandise on the shelves of a store.

"There is nothing new in this doctrine, but the deluge of free material, always with propaganda of some sort in it, has increased in volume to such an extent that it constitutes about nine-tenths of the mail an editor receives.

"So far I have failed to find any news in any of this free publicity, and the features sent out are the 'bunk.' We have followed the rule that any feature for the newspaper that is worth publishing is worth paying for."

The editorial group elected J. Frank McDermond, Jr., of the Attica (Ind.) Ledger Tribune, president.

Other speakers included Wilber E. Sutton, editor, Muncie (Ind.) Evening Press; and Paul J. Morgan, promotion manager, Indianapolis Star.

"So far from being a competitor of the newspaper, the average broadcasting station in the United States today merely acts as a stimulant for newspaper reading," Mr. Sutton maintained in his address on "Radio and the Newspapers."

"One of the most important features for newspaper publishers to consider is their radio news," he continued. "I do not, however, believe in carrying radio news merely to attract advertising. In addition to being unethical, it is unfair to the reader to print free publicity propaganda, and it is unfair to those advertisers who have not acquired the free reader habit."

Mr. Sutton outlined the vastness of the radio industry in America today, and concluded with the belief that the radio business hold greater possibilities of newspaper advantage in the future than any other market.

"The publisher must be the master of the facts about his community, and must bring every favorable advertising opportunity to the attention of every advertiser who is in a position to take advantage of it, if he would successfully promote the largest possible volume of advertising," Mr. Morgan declared.

TELLS START OF BULLETIN

Edmonton Daily Began as Hand-Written Paper for Hudson Bay Post

An interesting story is told by John Mitchell of Pakan, Alberta, of the origin of the Edmonton Bulletin, which is now figuring in a suit for damages against the Canadian Press.

In the fall of 1880, the officers at the Hudson Bay Company's post at Fort Edmonton, together with the officers of the North West Mounted Police stationed there, the Roman Catholic Bishop of St. Albert, the officials of the Indian Department and two local magistrates clubbed together and arranged for a weekly press despatch from Winnipeg over the new Government telegraph line.

The task of copying the dispatches for the subscribers fell to the lot of Mr. Mitchell, the copies being made on foolscap paper in ink. The title "The Bulletin" was placed at the top.

This makeshift publication was issued for several weeks and then was taken over by Frank Oliver and Alexander Taylor, who commenced its publication in print.

H. B. TRUNDLE BUYS WEEKLY

Resigns as B. M., Danville (Va.) Register & Bee, After 23 Years

H. Burns Trundle, for more than 20 years business manager of the Danville (Va.) Register and Evening Bee has purchased the Manassas (Va.) Journal, weekly, and assumed control Feb. 1. His two sons will assist in publishing the Journal.

Mr. Trundle in 1889 was associated with Col. Al. Fairbrother as part owner of the Bee and, when it was sold to the late Rorer A. James, he became business manager. When Mr. James acquired the Register, Mr. Trundle became business manager of that publication also, having carried the joint responsibility since 1903.

Critic Reviews His Own Play

To Bide Dudley, dramatic critic of the New York Evening World, came the experience this week of writng the review of his own play "The Matinee Girl," a musical comedy, which opened on Broadway, Feb. 2. McElbert Moore was co-author of the book with Mr. Dudley, and the music was written by Frank H. Gray. Mr. Dudley declared in his review that he "stood in the rear of the house" during the performance, "in order to have more room to shiver."

Launching Spanish Weekly

The Sun Company, San Bernardino, Cal., publishers of the Sun and Evening Telegram, have announced the addition of a weekly newspaper, El Sol De San Bernardino for the Spanish speaking people of the San Bernardino Valley, starting Feb. 1. Roberto Isaias is editor and manager. The Sun Company has just completed remodeling its building, moving editorial rooms and composing room to second floor.

Conrath Dines County Publishers

Elmer E. Conrath, editor of the Cuba (N. Y.) Patriot, entertained the 12 publishers of Allegany County at dinner in Cuba recently. Each guest brought with him the oldest paper he could find, one publication being an edition of the Fillmore Observer of 1821.

Twelfth Among Newspapers of the Nation in volume of Advertising

In 1925 the Tribune carried a total of 21,650,678 lines. Only one paper in New York and one in Chicago carried more than the Tribune.

This splendid record is conclusive evidence of the rapidly increasing value of the Tribune, Tampa and Southwest Florida to the advertiser.

Our Own World of Letters

By JAMES MELVIN LEE

FREDERIC WHYTE has done an excellent piece of work in compiling and editing the two volumes which bear the title "Life and Letters of W. T. Stead," (Houghton Mifflin Company). Few, if any, can appreciate the tremendous task he set for himself. The mass of material he had to go over simply staggers the imagination.

W. T. Stead was active in many fields. But his permanent place is in that of journalism. He first came to London in 1880 to help John Morley edit The Pall Mall Gazette. In five years he had become a great power in journalism. He had little use for static journalism: to him it must be dynamic or nothing at all. He was forever forcing the hands of Parliament. Consequently he was often called a sensational journalist.

His most spectacular exhibition along sensational lines was his exposure of the white slave trade in England and his actual demonstration of the ease with which a man could actually buy a young girl for immoral purposes. (Stead actually bought a girl to expose the trade.) But let Mr. Whyte tell about it:

> The exposure of criminal vice begun in the Pall Mall Gazette for July 6, 1885, under the title "The Maiden Tribute of Modern Babylon," shocked most people in England out of their senses, but not the people who were best informed on the subject and who had it nearest at heart. The words cited above from Mrs. Fawcett's letter express eloquently and convincingly the profound emotion of thankfulness with which Stead's action was regarded by an immense multitude of English women and English men. The subject is a horrible one, but it forms an essential part of Stead's biography and calls for full treatment in these pages. Stead himself, as we shall see, felt always that this was the outstanding episode in his career—his best title to fame. It was a source of real and enduring happiness to him to know that the Criminal Law Amendment Bill, which, as the result of his efforts, was carried through Parliament in 1885, could be justly spoken of as Stead's Act.

Stead's decision to start the campaign was reached after the following incident:

> Stead asked Howard Vincent whether the innocent victims did not cry out and scream!—was not the thought of their screams enough to "raise hell!"
> "It doesn't even raise the neighbors," Howard Vincent replied.
> "Then I will raise hell!" declared Stead.

Such escapades—as Stead called them—marked the earlier period of "The New Journalism" to which a long chapter is devoted in volume one. Matthew Arnold writing in The Nineteenth Century thus characterized the new type of journalism that won so much celebrity for Stead's journal:

> It is full of ability, novelty, variety, sensation, sympathy, generous instincts; its one fault is that it is feather-brained. It throws out assertions at a venture because it wishes them true; does not correct either them or itself, if they are false; and to get at the state of things as they really are it seems to feel no concern whatever.

This chapter on "The New Journalism" is one of the most important in the volume for the American reader. It is followed by another chapter which takes up a later phase of "The New Journalism." This second chapter sets forth Stead as a critic of Russia, describes the beginning of his friendship with Cecil Rhodes, and discusses "Letters from the Vatican."

The next chapter tells what Stead's staff thought about him. It is a chapter of personal glimpses. John Ruskin is thus shown as a sort of contributing critic for Stead on newspaper policies and practices:

> Ruskin was not the only master of letters who overlooked Stead's literary infelicities in appreciation of his moral and public purposes. Ruskin was indeed a frequent correspondent for publication on or for private counsel. On one occasion he sent to the office a copy of The P. M. G.—now, alas, lost—with almost every item in it re-headed, or marked to be cut down or omitted or to occupy greater space or a more prominent position.

The second volume opens with the letter-books of the Review of Reviews. While editing that magazine Stead wrote between seventy and eighty thousand letters—badly preserved by the old fashion copying process, for carbons were not known. They were mailed to thousands of correspondents but again Mr. Whyte has shown remarkable editorial skill in his selection of what ought to be printed.

In the second volume will be found the account of Stead's first visit to America. From this visit came his book "If Christ Came to Chicago." He obtained his material by working in a city gang of snow shovelers. Such strenuous work under such climatic conditions gave him a severe chill which prevented him from spending a night with them in a municipal lodging-house of Chicago.

A subhead in this Chicago chapter is "Bad News." Stead was then editing the Review of Reviews, but he wanted a daily paper of his own. While in Chicago he learned that his plans would not go through. The chapter concludes with a statement by Hal O'Flaherty, European Manager of the Chicago Daily News, on the results of Stead's visit to Chicago.

One of the best personal glimpses of Stead comes from an American journalist, Frank Carpenter. It originally appeared in the Washington Evening Star, but is reprinted in part in the second volume.

This volume traces Mr. Stead's career from his visit to Chicago down to his tragic death on the "Titanic." Two topics treated somewhat at length are the Peace Conference at the Hague and the South African War.

Several appendices conclude the volume. The first two have a direct connection with newspaper work. The first outlines "The Gospel According to the Pall Mall Gazette:" the second reprints an interview with Stead in the Chicago Tribune—an interview which sets forth the principal features of his forthcoming daily paper.

These two volumes make excellent companions for the two which dealt with the life of William Cobbett. The life of both ran along parallel lines both as individuals and as journalists. Too little is known about either, but the opportunity to know more is afforded by four excellent books recently published.

IN the World's Work for February will be found the editorial "The Real Romance of Mr. Munsey's Life." Its writer believes that there is something "indubitably romantic in a man heaping up a large fortune in commercial activities and then, at one swoop, devoting practically all of it to the education of his fellow citizens in pure art."

But the article which most deserves attention is "The Menace of Paroled Convicts" by Lawrence Veiller—the third to deal with the rising tide of crime. The article takes up in part the campaign of the Chicago Tribune against crime and lawlessless. The article is illustrated with several wordless editorials in the shape of cartoons drawn by Orr of the Tribune and Cassel of the New York Evening World.

THE Baron de Hirsch Trade School has published in pamphlet form, "New York's First Newspaper—William Bradford, Printer." This pamphlet is a reprint from an article which I contributed to the New York World on Nov. 8, 1925. I am not going to say anything more about it except the fact that copies may be obtained upon application to that school, 222 East 64th street, New York City.

P.S. I can safely add that the school, so far as the printing goes, has turned out a fine product.

THE January issue of Oregon Exchanges has several sidelights on journalism of the Pacific coast. From the viewpoint of human interest "Experiences of a Typographical Tourist" by Thomas Nelson, now editor of the Junction City Times, deserves the first reading when this periodical is picked up.

WHEN I first began conducting this department I had occasion to review "The World Almanac and Book of Facts." I recall mentioning the fact that the late Charles R. Miller, then editor of the New York Times, once said to me that "The World Almanac" was unquestionably the most useful book in any newspaper office. Issues since that time would, in my opinion, strengthen the truth of his assertion rather than detract from it.

This annual volume has always been ably edited, but never more so than under Robert Hunt Lyman. It admirably supplements the daily perusal of a good newspaper. Indeed, to read a newspaper intelligently one must have some such handy book of reference if the news is to be interpreted properly.

great service if it put forth additional efforts to market this book over a wider territory than that in which it circulates. Children in school will find this volume just as helpful as the editor at his desk. Yet for some reason the teachers are backward in promoting its use. Already I have found the volume helpful in my own home in answering questions about the Locarno treaties and the Dawes Plan.

For the newspaper worker three sections may be mentioned. I refer to "The Business World," "Big Problems of 1925-26," and "Labor Review for 1925." In less than a page John J. Leary, Jr., the labor editor of the World, has condensed a remarkable résumé of the labor situation.

Students of journalism—I am not referring to those matriculated in schools—should be sure to read the sketch of the World. It occupies only three pages—26, 27, and 28. The concluding paragraphs on page 28 deal with the Bureau of Accuracy and Fair Play. The World has taken out no patents to cover the means used to obtain accuracy and fairness. I would apply the standards of accuracy more closely to "The Almanac" than I would to the daily issues of the World. It is only justice to Mr. Lyman to say that his book will stand the test.

A JAPANESE book, "The 1926 Advertisement Directory" (Mannensha) has been received and will be reviewed in this department as soon as comments have been received from one of my Japanese students.

THE late Solomon Bulkley Griffin, for many years managing editor of the Springfield (Mass.) Republican, is the author of "W. Murray Crane—A Man and Brother" (Little, Brown & Company). The foreword is contributed by President Coolidge. The book deserves a place in any newspaper library because of the prominent part played by Crane in American politics.

Historically the volume has value to the printer because of Crane's immediate connection with the paper mills at Dalton, Mass., an enterprise started by his grandfather, Zenas Crane, in 1801. In its early days this mill supplied the paper for many of the newspapers throughout New England. But later it specialized in fine writing paper and in paper for bank notes. The story of the paper in which silk threads should be introduced in the process of manufacture is especially interesting and may be useful to the editorial writer. This story starts on page 22.

For some reason Crane's newspaper associations are not given in the volume. One wonders why.

A revised edition of "Who's Who in British Advertising" (The Gainsborough Publishing Company) is off the press. The main new feature of the 1926 edition is the section for the Dominions and the British Possessions Oversees. "A British Advertising Year Book" is a phrase which correctly indicates the contents of the volume. The foreword is contributed by Sidney Allnutt who was for some fifteen years editor of The Advertising World.

The book opens with "Newspaper Societies." Each society is described briefly and is accompanied by a list of officers. Next comes the advertising associations with a similar mode of treatment—then the billposting societies, the local advertising clubs, and the provincial clubs.

A section of practical value to American readers is headed "Media for the Million." In special articles it sets forth the advantages of car cards for railways and "undergrounds," the power of the poster, the kinema film as a medium, scintillating signs, advertising in theater programs, etc. Brief sections list the trade press and also press directories.

About four-fifths of the volume, however, is devoted to brief biographies of men prominent in British advertising. These biographical sections are compiled both in subject matter and in mode of treatment like those found in that well-known reference book of biography, "Who's Who."

"Who's Who in British Advertising" may be obtained from the Gainsborough Publishing Company, 62 Windsor House, Victoria Street, London, S. W. 1, England. The price for Canada and for the United States is $2.

DON C. SEITZ in The Outlook for Jan. 27, comments on "The Country Press." An editorial note says that in this article Mr. Seitz "calls the roll of the states and sets off a few well-placed bombs." If he does, some of these bombs are duds.

But Mr. Seitz does give a truthful picture of newspaper conditions in many rural sections when he says:

> The small towns, as a rule, do not respect the local papers as they should. The little locals are sniffed at with contempt. Slang names are employed in designating the useful publications. I know an excellent Plaindealer that is commonly alluded to as The Painkiller, while Bladder is often opprobriously applied to the weeklies in many towns. I do not know why this is so, except that small towns contain more condensed cussedness than big ones. The newspaper is loyal to the community and everybody in it, but nobody feels any sense of loyalty to the newspaper. Most of them receive but $1.50 a year from subscribers—less than three cents a copy for an amazing lot of information and convenience. They usually have to be clubbed into paying this, and when the Post Office rule requiring advance payment went into effect the country weeklies lost about 25 per cent of their readers.

Of the opportunities in rural fields Mr. Seitz holds this opinion, with which I thoroughly agree:

> The country field holds many opportunities where those shut out of higher activities by city consolidations can find room and good livings. There must be a reaction in favor of more people and better living in the small towns and away from city congestion. Good roads and automobiles are evening the flow of money throughout the land. Soon one spot will be about as good as another, and chances for success will be more evenly distributed. In this the country paper will reap its deferred reward for doing so much for a community that the community is unable to do for itself.

Bruce Barton on Church Advertising

Bruce Barton, of Barton, Durstine & Osborne, New York advertising agency, urged the churches to employ magazine and newspaper advertising to tell of their "good works," addressing the Men's Bible Clas of the Park Avenue Baptist Church, New York, Feb. 2. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., is honorary president of the class.

DAILY GIVING AWAY GROCERIES

Shopping Bags Given Women Answering Merchandising Questionnaires

To obtain detailed answers to a merchandising questionnaire the Milwaukee Journal is giving away a shopping bag containing groceries valued at $3 to housewives whose answers are certified as complete by members of the daily's merchandising bureau.

The answers will be used as a basis for the Journal's 1926 "Consumer Analysis of the Milwaukee Market" containing detailed reports of the consumption of household commodities. Fifteen thousand questionnaires have been sent out to housewives. Those answering them must bring their copies to the Journal office in person to receive the prize shopping bags.

Among the articles in the bags this year are bread, ginger ale, soaps and cleaning compounds, gelatine, soups, teas, pancake flour, tooth paste, breakfast food, cough drops, tea-table cakes, polish and cheese.

PRELATE DISCUSSES CRIME NEWS

Gauthier Criticises Exploitation—Says Dailies Should Lead Public

In a letter addressed to the newspapers of Montreal, Archbishop Georges Gauthier, Roman Catholic administrator of the Diocese of Montreal, discussed recently the publication of sensational news, and stated that while he does not advocate the suppression of crime news in general, he believes that the lurid details should be omitted.

"It is not a matter of asking the newspapers for absolute silence on dishonorable affairs which happen," he said, "so much as to employ discretion with regard thereto. When these regrettable facts are embellished by photographs, by the reconstruction of the scenes, interviews with relatives of ridiculous and painful details, with family histories exposed to the public gaze, journalism is being practiced which is not dignified either as to its mission or to its responsibilities, and it is this excess which should be suppressed.

"How can anyone believe that all this exaggeration is necessary? Rather is it not seriously injurious?" After speaking of its effect on the young, and the mania for imitation which is often let loose by the uncovering of vice, the Archbishop continues:

"I am afraid that it is useless to argue that the public gets the papers which it deserves. Is it not more just to say that the newspapers have the public they create? In spite of what may be thought to the contrary the journalist is not an echo, he is a guide. He cannot content himself with following public opinion; he should direct it. The duty of a chief has never been to follow his troop; but to be at the head."

"THE Story of Waterloo" was the title of a series of full-page advertisements run recently by the Waterloo (Ia.) Evening Courier. The explanatory, copy was signed by various business firms. Following are some of the subjects: "Schools and Colleges"; "Waterloo as a Hospital Center"; "Waterloo as a Farming Center"; "Waterloo as an Amusement Center." Other pages were devoted to transportation, manufacturing, welfare organizations, churches, the municipality, and retail stores.—M. R. L.

Confectioners, candy manufacturers, jobbers and retailers will be an excellent source this Valentine's Day for a group of ads featuring candy as Valentine gift, as the confectioners are preparing to launch a big national campaign a little later. Florists and stationers, however, should not be neglected.—C. M. L.

A cleaning and pressing establishment at Bloomington, Ind. found that Tuesday was a dull day, and so they advertised that two suits, coats, dresses, etc. would be cleaned and pressed on Tuesday for one cent more than the usual price of one. Investigation in another city brought out the fact that beauty parlors also had a slack day on Tuesday and considered giving a shampoo and a manicure for the price of one plus one cent, etc. Druggists also advocated having their 1 cent sales on Tuesdays. How about your city?—Thora Eigenmann.

A Michigan paper obtained statements from business men and manufacturers on the value of an education received in a business college, and armed with these, obtained good displays from three local business colleges.—B. A. T.

The Houston Chronicle recently ran a "Dollar Day" sale in its classified advertising department, offering special classified lineage for $1.00 for that day. The department was "swamped" with business, and the offer was such a success that the Chronicle repeated it later—W. H. M., Austin, Texas.

Now that national automotive associations are encouraging the saving of tires, in an effort to break the rubber trust, why not line up a page of advertisements of tire repair shops? Incorporate an explanatory story in the page.—Harold J. Ashe.

Practically every city has its "Rent-A-Car" concerns which make a practice of renting out various kinds of automobiles to persons who do not own cars of their own. These can often be sold for a good spread if the solicitor will draft a table showing the car fare on the railroads to various nearby points, and then a comparative table showing the cost per person when a rented car is used.—B. A.T.

If business is somewhat dull with your shoe dealer, get him to put on a special sale of either men's or women's shoes, whereby the customer may trade in a pair of old shoes on a new pair and receive an allowance of $2, or some such amount on each new pair purchased. One requirement is that the customer must wear the old shoes into the store. The old shoes are then given to the Salvation Army. Such a sale has been a success here on both men's and women's shoes.—Anton Jepperson, Mason City, Ia.

GETS SIX MONTHS FOR FRAUD

Man Exposed by New York World Given Maximum Sentence

Philip Pape pleaded guilty in a New York court Jan. 18, to defrauding advertisers in the business opportunity columns of the New York World and was sentenced to serve not less than six months or more than three years in the penitentiary. Evidence produced by the Bureau of Accuracy and Fair Play of the World caused him to change his plea.

The specific complaint against Pape was made by Etta MacCauley, who advertised a rooming house for sale. Pape, giving the name of Brown and representing himself as the head of the Active Business Exchange, specializing in the sale of rooming houses, called on her and pursuaded her to pay him $25 as an advance commission, agreeing to return the money if he did not make the sale in ten days.

He failed to make the sale or return the money, Miss MacCauley complained to the World and an investigation brought to light 45 other persons who had been similarly defrauded.

RECENTLY a clergyman in the 60's, a man of more than average ability unable to obtain a church in competition with the younger ministers of his denomination, decided to advertise in the daily press for a pastorate—and did so without making any special effort to conceal his identity. Interviewed by the newspapers, he upheld his unconventional method of seeking a new congregation, and told the reporters bluntly that present-day conditions offered only two alternatives to the pastor unable to obtain a berth: charity or suicide, and that more than one gray-haired minister, finding himself without a field for his labors, had been confronted with such a choice. Some news stories of absorbing interest followed—and the underlying idea he set forth, developed by an alert church reporter or editor in almost any fair-sized community, should be productive in the extreme of thought-compelling articles or interviews with churchmen, prominent laymen, elderly ministers, and social welfare workers—to determine if his was an unduly pessimistic view, or whether such a condition exists and is merely being ignored because of the infrequency with which it comes so dramatically to public attention.—C. L. Moody, Lynn (Mass.) Telegram-News.

Because of the peculiar names of the latest dance records, it is becoming more and more embarrassing for men to buy phonograph records from the girls at the music stores. They must approach the clerk, and in response to her query, "What can I do for you?", answer, "I Love You," "I Want a Mama," "I've Got a Sweetie," "You Know You Belong to Somebody Else," etc. Get a list of the new dance records, and then talk to a girl who sells phonograph records.—R. W. A., San Antonio, Tex.

A good many folks, shivering as they hurry down the street, wonder how a policeman or a truck driver or a laborer can go along, doing their duty, apparently unmindful of the cold. If one could see the many layers of clothing encasing the bulky patrolman there would be less amazement about how he can stand the cold. And a yarn about who has the coldest job in town ought to go well some chilly evening.—A. C. R.

What are the odd, interesting, unusual and frequently startling allegations on which divorce petitions have been based in your city? Send your clever feature story writer to interview the clerk of the Domestic Relations Division of the Circuit Court on this subject.—David Resnick.

A good feature story can be written based on the question "Does a moving picture camera operator get a 'kick' out of the films?" The operator can also tell you of the remarkable improvements in motion picture theaters since the days of bed sheets, used for the screen; the camera cranked by hand, and the "piano orchestra."—R. W. A.

SELL MORE MERCHANDISE IN NEW ENGLAND THROUGH THE DAILY NEWSPAPERS

THE business and social life of New England are so closely associated that there is little evidence of so called class distinction.

They are substantial folks, these New Englanders, having the same ideas, an equal distribution of wealth and the same requirements for comforts and luxuries. These conditions constitute a fertile territory for the distribution of merchandise.

The foundation of a nation wide advertising campaign could well be laid in New England. Facilities for distribution are ideal and wholesale zones are clearly defined so that results may be safely predetermined.

The prosperous population of New England is easily reached, whether for distribution of goods or for announcement of goods. Its leading newspapers, forming a chain of advertising publicity that has no weak link, reaches substantially all of these people who are potential buyers. The cost of an advertising campaign in this territory is moderate. Compared with any other method of getting your message into the home it is extremely low.

Valuable service is offered the National Advertiser by the New England daily newspapers listed below. They will supply you with details of territorial survey and other information that will materially aid in the distribution and sales promotion of your merchandise.

THE continued leadership of The Sun in advertising among New York evening newspapers was more pronounced in January than ever before.

In January The Sun led the second New York evening newspaper by 229,498 lines. The Sun's lead during this month was nearly a hundred thousand lines greater than in any preceding month.

The Sun's gain in total advertising in January of this year compared with January of last year was 206,894 lines. This was 72,204 lines more than the combined gains of all the other New York evening newspapers.

Advertisers prefer The Sun to all other New York evening newspapers because of its demonstrated superior selling power — a selling power that is due to an unusually responsive circulation.

The Sun is read by people who have the means as well as the desire to buy what they need and want — people who have confidence in The Sun as a newspaper and who respond readily to the advertisements which it publishes.

National Advertisers have found through experience that The Sun is an extremely effective medium through which to sell their products in New York and for this reason they use more space in The Sun, month after month, and year after year, than they use in any other New York evening newspaper.

For products of good quality The Sun is a most effective selling force in the world's greatest market.

Iowa's families
have an average wealth of $17,000!

Iowa Daily Newspaper Publishers will help you get distribution in Iowa. They have bound themselves together under the "Iowa Plan." Write for information.

THERE are 586,000 families in Iowa, a big majority of whom are able to buy most of the luxuries of life as well as the necessities.

In fact, the wealth of Iowa averages $17,000 for every family in the state!

This presents a truly amazing opportunity for the manufacturer—a situation he simply can not afford to ignore.

It becomes all the more impressive when you note that Iowa has the greatest number of farms equipped with telephones, and also the smallest percentage of illiteracy.

And remember that nearly every Iowa family takes a daily Iowa newspaper.

No wonder Iowa's jobbers are enthusiastic about any product of merit that is advertised in this medium!

They know that advertising in the daily Iowa newspapers means more sales and quick sales from one end of the state to the other!

THE population of Greater New York is 6,059,444. The population of Metropolitan New York is 9,444,000. These added millions live in New York's great suburban areas — Northern New Jersey, Westchester County, Southern Connecticut and Long Island.

These people are as closely linked to New York City as though they actually lived on Broadway. Over 350,000 of them travel to New York every weekday to work. As many more come to BUY! They represent the prosperous and substantial element of the Metropolitan area—the home owners, bankers, brokers, business executives. More than 32% of the men listed in the Director of Directors live in the suburbs.

Department stores recognize the value of suburban business and cater to it extensively. One store spends over $1,000,000 a year for suburban deliveries—and finds it profitable.

Over 56 percent of the total metropolitan sales of automobiles for the first ten months of 1925 were for suburban delivery.

The Herald Tribune is the favorite newspaper of the suburbs. In the entire residential suburban district the Herald Tribune consistently outsells all other morning newspapers.

Herald Tribune advertisers gain the benefit of this suburban coverage, in addition to a wide circulation of the highest grade in the Greater City.

Hence the Herald Tribune must be the keystone for any campaign which hopes to cover the entire New York Metropolitan market.

And here's a significant fact—The Herald Tribune is the only standard size morning newspaper in New York to show a steady gain in circulation in 1925.

Dream of Press Uniting To Shape World Ideals Behind Haines' Florida Plan

Retired Railroad Builder Tells Why He Is Giving Millions For Press City Project—Interviewer Believes Him Sincere and Disinterested, But Not Fully Informed on Practical Points

By MARLEN PEW

(By Telegraph to Editor & Publisher)

ALTAMONTE SPRINGS, Fla., Feb. 9.—Charles D. Haines, originator and lavish patron of the International Press Foundation, which became a reality through formal acceptance of his extraordinary gifts by a convention of newspaper men assembled here at his request during the past week, this afternoon granted to Editor & Publisher an interview during which he told the story of the benefaction and candidly and freely replied to questions concerning his motives and dreams of service to humanity.

Mr. Haines' gift to the journalists of the world consists of donations, in his name and that of his wife, of 1,000 acres of land at Geneva in the heart of some of the most ravishingly beautiful tropical lands of the state, the real value of which he says he cannot estimate but which may be worth $5,000,000; his home here which he says has a value of $250,000, and $50,000 in cash for preliminary organization purposes. The deed to his home has been made with the qualification that it shall be used by the donors during their lifetime. He makes no mention of considerable sums of money which it is known he has expended during the past two years in organizing the amazing philanthropy. For instance, the convention held here during the past week was at Mr. Haines' expenses and his nationwide offer to defray the travelling and living expenses of delegates who attended from every state except California. The aggregate of this cost alone was mode than $25,000, in the opinion of local newspaper men.

Mr. and Mrs. Haines had just returned to their home from the final session of the Foundation convention, when this writer called. Mr. Haines was radiant, excited, exclamatory, and, as he said, happy to tell the newspaper fraternity through Editor & Publisher what it all meant to him and what he believed it would some day mean to journalism and the reading public of the world.

As he rocked and smoked on the veranda of his home, in a setting of tropical grandeur overlooking a shimmering purple lake, this 69 year old capitalist presented the picture of a triumphant altruist, long misunderstood but at last victorious over a skeptical world.

"I have not blamed anyone for hesitating to accept me at my word in this matter," he said. "This is a selfish world and perhaps it is right that every thing should be questioned and made to prove itself worthy. Newspaper men by habit are incredulous and one of their finest qualities is that they put all public questions under acid tests to find the truth."

During the interview the following dialogue occurred.

Q—"Mr. Haines, it is only fair to tell you that but few newspaper men have understood your proposal for a Press Foundation and that there has been an undercurrent of professional opinion that the motive may not have been disinterested."

A—"I know that is true, perhaps better than anyone else. Skepticism has been much more general than you admit. The air has been full of boom propaganda in this state and naturally many people have connected the plan with the real estate development. I have appreciated that right along. Then, again it is unbelievable to many people that a man can want to give away his possessions, as Mr. Haines and I do. However, I will tell you and you may repeat it to the newspaper profession, that there is not, nor can there ever be, anything that they or any mortal soul can give to me. Wealth I have in such abundance that I cannot ever use it and my problem in life is to free myself of these riches. Mrs. Haines and I are childless. We are passing into the twilight zone. We can carry nothing with us to the Great Beyond. The fortune that I have succeeded in amassing can be put to high or to unworthy use according to my judgments now, and I believe that I have found a means by which this fortune can be made of vast public benefit. There is no honor that I want. There is no distinction that can come to me through these gifts that I will accept. I do not even want my name on this house. I am not ambitious in any political or commercial or social sense. What I have done is to satisfy a purpose to serve my fellowmen."

Q—"Why among all the interests of the world did you select journalism as the object of your benefaction?"

A—"In the first place, it is wholly impersonal. It does not trace back to any individual or to any specific occasion. Many years ago when I was building a railroad in Michigan I needed to gain popular approval of my plans and I started a newspaper, which I ran for a short time and then made a present of it to the editor. On other occasions I owned newspapers in Boston and at Hudson, N. Y., the former called the Guide and long since suspended and the latter subsequently merged with another paper. I have owned eight weekly papers during my lifetime. As a boy I learned how to set type and printed a little paper. Journalism has always fascinated me. When I was 27 years old I was sent to Congress from the 19th district of New York and there I met many correspondents. I have built 38 steam and street car lines in many states of this nation. I am a director in 18 companies today. I have made the acquaintance of a large number of newspaper men, all of whom I have admired.

"Gradually I became convinced that newspaper men were the most unselfish, patient, earnest and intelligent class of workers in any industry or among the professions and that they received the scantiest material rewards. I came to know that all over the country, particularly in small towns, there were hundreds of men and women in journalism who were giving more to their communities than any other individuals and yet, although they might work themselves to shreds, old age would find them unprepared for even common creature comforts. These observations have been confirmed during the past two years many times. I have hundreds of letters from able newspaper workers telling of material neglect which is sufficient to touch the heart of any one.

"The sentimental features were subsequently dwarfed in my mind by the practical advantages of a world-wide press organization as a service to mankind."

At this point Mr. Haines referred to the fact that the typographical unions provide homes for aged or infirm printers and suggested that among his early thoughts was the one that newspaper men might at least be as well provided for. He saw his gifts, unlike the Bennett gift, would have no strings attached.

"Mrs. Haines and I often talked of this," he said. "And at first we thought we might provide for a home for the newspaper men and women of Florida. We found that this plan did not meet the approval of newspaper men of the state and after I had talked with prominent editors here I decided that the scope of the home should be national. Gradually the conception came to us that it was not a home that the newspaper people wanted or needed so much as an organization and that this should indeed be international.

"The original plan was to give this home 110 acres and all improvements and indeed we did go so far as to form a local committee of newspaper people to accept it and organize for service. It was when I discovered that this benefaction was being taken advantage of by real estate interests that I changed the first plans. No sooner had the plans for this press home been announced than real estate boomers on all sides of our property began to exploit their lands and we simply withdrew to stop it.

"Our original gift to the Florida Newspaperman's Home was $10,000 in cash and the property. I did not wish the newspaper men then or at any time to be called upon for financial aid. It was my belief that the public would supply all the funds needed to build and carry on the work after the home was established.

"After the conception of an international venture became fixed in our minds and after the real estate boomers had upset our plans here I sent out a crew of experienced real estate buyers and gathered together 1,000 acres of what I believe to be the most beautiful country under the sky. This is on the Geneva Peninsula in Seminole County. It required six months to buy the land and the story of how land values jumped around there before we got our plot together is a chapter I shall not dwell upon, but it was exciting enough for me. More than $5,000,000 have been expended on Press City properties. The most beautiful of all has been donated to newspaper men.

"Press City covers 12 by five miles. It has been accepted by representative newspaper men in every state of the Union except California, and I may say that I have just received a letter from California saying that that state misunderstood the situation and will presently join.

"An expert land engineer is there now working out the scheme. Every state is to have ten acres and a less amount will be apportioned to every nation that accepts our donation.

"Every property will face on one of the magnificent lakes, Jessup and Harvey. These lakes are ten miles in length. Three railroads enter Press City. It is 40 miles from the ocean.

"To prevent a repetition of land speculation operations like these that spoiled our original plans at my home here, it has been arranged that 1,000 adjoining acres shall not fall into the hands of the public. Mr. H. S. Kelsey has donated 500 acres of these lands to the American Legion and 500 to the Boy Scouts of America. Thus Press City becomes a public institution, safe from private exploitation."

Q.—"Mr. Haines, it has been said that your plans called for some establishment of a Peace Palace in connection with Press City. Just what is the connection?"

A.—"Yes, that has been one of the dreams, but the whole thing is bigger than that. You see, I believe that the press is the world's greatest power. I believe absolutely that the press directs public opinion all over the world to a greater extent than any other agency. There will be no more war, for instance, when the press is organized against war. No evil can exist when the organized power of the press is directed against it. I do not know what the newspaper men will make of this land. I imagine all sorts of things about it is up to them. I want it to be international in scope for the problems of the day are international. I have merely laid the ground work for them to erect any sort of palace that their imagination and ingenuity may dictate. It may be for world peace, or something else—I do not know. But I do know that if the moral courage of journalism is mobilized it will be for high and noble purposes.

At this point in the interview the old railroad builder soared through the clouds of altruism. This practical man of business was childlike in his faith in the power of the printed word to lift the eyes of the world to the skies.

"All other professions and businesses are organized and the press must be," he said. "It must come largely through educational processes. At Press City I believe that there will be a huge university of journalism some day, something that will teach journalism in its highest phases. I can see there an auditorium seating 15,000 persons, with people coming from all over the world to attend great assemblies of the leaders of thought. I expect that the best movements for the benefit of mankind will be started in Press City. There will be homes for those who want to live in Press City, many thousands of such homes in time. There will be sanitariums, libraries, golf courses and homes for each state and each nation. There will be a great radio broadcasting station, airplane service, wonderful water sports and many such things, too numerous to mention. All will be non-profit making. It will be of, for and by newspaper men, but it will be a service to all the people of the world. It will be big, big, big.

"In my lifetime I have never recognized the word fail, and one reason that I like newspaper men so much is that they do not admit that there is any worthwhile thing that cannot be accomplished. Yes, they will work for peace and for all other movements in the interest of mankind, if they are organized.

"Newspaper men can get anything they want. They could get rich if they wanted to, but most of them have their eyes on other and higher objects, often neglectful of themselves.

"Now, it will be simple enough for them to get the money to make Press City all that I imagine for it and much more. I have said and believe that it will be possible for the newspaper men to collect $150,000,000 to complete this great plan. You see, it will come about through apportioning the work among the states and the nations. For instance, New York State will want to build a beautiful home on its plot and also contribute to the central institutions. It would be nothing at all for the newspaper men of New York to collect $2,500,000, and that is about the proportion that would be needed from the various states and foreign countries. Everyone knows how easy it is for a newspaper man to collect money for such a fund. Why, in my own experience I have never failed to subscribe to any fund for the newspaper boys whereas I might pass by other funds that were also deserving. Rich men all over the country are getting ready to die and have no idea what to do with their fortunes. Everyone would do something for the press if there was an organized effort."

Mr. Haines went on at length in this strain. It appeared to be his firm conviction that newspaper men are in a position and are desirous of leading world crusades for improved conditions and also that such is their zeal that they will seek to build up in Press City through private subscriptions an institution to function every conceivable form of altruism.

"I have given the project a full measure of cherished devotion and I have faith that it will be a great service to humanity," he said. He specified that newspaper men did not want charity, that they merely wanted an organization to make individuals less dependent in old age and given an opportunity to work out plans for human betterment.

It is not easy to interpret in this interview Mr. Haines' thought on these subjects and candor impels this correspondent to declare the opinion that while the donor of Press City is sincere he has not acted on full information. He seemed exceedingly vague on many practical points.

A more intense man would be hard to find. As he speaks he becomes oratorical and his upper lip draws taut over his teeth as he snaps out his convictions.

Time and again he reiterated his complete social, political or material disinterestedness. He is a religious man and once, to emphasize his earnestness, he made a solemn declaration that his sole object was to serve others.

"Why?" said he at another time, "It is not new for me to be giving. I have been doing it always. It has been easy for me to make money. I once gave a cotton mill to my 3,000 employes at New Bedford, Mass. I am the largest owner of timber land in the world.

"What will become of it all? I suppose I shall give it to those who are working it. Then I have the finest mahogany in the world. I sold one log of curly mahogany to the Pullman Company for $20,000. There are miles of it. All these things I am giving away. Year ago Mrs. Haines and I decided to be our own executors. We want to decide the future of these things and we want them to do the best service for humanity."

He took the writer about his home, a very pleasant and wholesome bungalow, painted green. There are a group of houses, with a wide veranda. There are hundreds of finer places in the state, but none more homelike. He exhibited with pride a solid mahogany bedstead that he said had come from his Central America lands. Mrs. Haines showed two antique shawls that Mr. Haines said he had paid $10,000 for many years ago in Mexico, that the coloring and embroidery was a lost art and that the shawls were now worth $50,000. The furnishings of the rooms were remarkable for their diversity of taste.

The aged capitalist took the writer over the beautiful grounds, a feature of which is a fernery, where 125 persons are employed. These ferns are shipped commercially over the country and are used by florists in making bouquets. They grow only in a half shade and to obtain this, a lattice building is required.

"This," said Mr. Haines, "is the largest building under a single cover in the world. It covers six acres and there are 19,000 posts to support the roof. It cost more than a million dollars."

Negroes employed in the fernery and for them a colony of small but pleasant bungalows have been built.

Putting his arm on the writer's shoulder, Mr. Haines said:

"This is no longer our home. It has been deeded to you and your craft. It is as much yours as anyone else's. I want you and all the others to use it. It has been agreed, of course, that Mrs. Haines and I shall live here for the rest of our lives, but we are merely custodians.

"I hope that the newspaper men will become very active and I believe that they will. I have furnished the ground. I have never seen men so enthusiastic as these representative journalists who came to this convention. I tell you there were tears in the eyes of many of them as they got into this thing and saw its possibilities. I am grateful to those who came to Florida and who have got under this big project. They will not let it lag. I want to read to you the slogan that was printed in the convention program. It sums it all up: 'The International Press Foundation was organized for unselfish service to God and Man. Its main objects are to be helpful to all members of the newspaper fraternity, to unify and intensify the powers of the press which, through the Foundation, will aid in bringing peace, security and happiness to all mankind. Its present membership is made up of the state press associations of 47 of the sovereign States of the American Union; 44 Governors of states; 80 United States Senators; 436 members of the National House of Representatives and the ambassadors or chargés d'affaires of 39 foreign nations.

Early in the interview Mr. Haines reviewed his life. He was a farmer boy, born at Kinderhook in the Catskills. He left school at 14 to work at the telegraph key.

"I was an expert at that," said he.

He then became a brakeman and locomotive engineer. He said he could take an engine to pieces and reassemble it. He spoke of having engaged in many businesses. He built a horse car line when he was a boy and said that Jay Gould gave him $10,000 for a railroad job before he was of age. He built many short line railroads in various parts of the country, one in Florida. Many were absorbed by other lines.

He speaks with unconcealed pride of his term as a Congressman and that he entered the House with the late William Jennings Bryan. Some years ago a movement was started in Florida to nominate him as governor and many flattering editorials appeared in the local papers. But Mr. Haines declared time and again that he now has no political aspirations. He even deprecated newspaper publicity concerning himself and declared that when the delegates to the recent convention proposed to give his name to the Press Home he said that rather than permit this to happen he would withdraw.

He speaks familiarly of many of the richest men in the country and said on several occasions that he "did big things with big people."

Florida newspaper men interviewed were unanimous in saying that Mr. Haines is sincere in his purposes, and in his declarations of disinterestedness.

STILLMAN STORY NOW TOLD FROM THE INSIDE

John K. Winkler, Formerly New York American Reporter, Brings Back Clean Beat to His Old Paper—He Tells True Facts of Sensational Society Scandal

By PHILIP SCHUYLER

(Copyright 1926, by Editor & Publisher)

Editor & Publisher herewith presents first of a series of articles telling for the first time inside newspaper details of some of the most sensational stories of crime and society scandal in the last decade.

John Kennedy Winkler, for 15 years on the New York American staff, who covered every big court story in that time, discloses untold angles of many a noted case which sold papers for the nation's press. He begins with the Stillman fight, and also deals among others with Harry K. Thaw's escape from Matteawan, the Halls-Mills murder mystery, and Gerald Chapman.

Mr. Winkler is now a free-lance reporter, contributing to Colliers' Weekly, Everybodys' and other magazines.

TO a real newspaper man a word is as good as a bond. An old chestnut, of course, but it worked out true in dramatic fashion in New York last Saturday, when the New York American obtained through John K. Winkler, former staff man, now writing for Colliers', a spectacular beat on what is being called the Stillman reconciliation story.

Saturday evening papers in New York were at their wits' end to cover up on Winkler's score. Sunday papers did not fare much better. All queries radioed to Mr. and Mrs. Stillman, sailing for Europe abroad the S. S. Olympic on a "trial honeymoon" received the same reply:—"See Winkler." He confirmed the fact of reunion, but kept the details for the American. Dr. Edward J. Bing, of the United Press Associations, was also on the Olympic. That was one leak not stopped up in an otherwise air-tight "scoop."

I talked to H. H. Stansbury, the American's managing editor, this week, and he told how this sensational story was kept secret more than a fortnight until finally ready because two newspaper men had shaken hands. And later in his East 9th street apartment, Winkler revealed for me the hitherto untold newspaper details of one of the most remarkable public divorce dramas of this generation's true-life stage.

It was at "Old Timers' Night" at the New York Newspaper Club that Winkler told his old newspaper friend Stansbury that Anne Urquhart Stillman and James A. Stillman were approaching an end of their marital troubles. He then told the story published last week of how Mr. Stillman had pressed his mother's ring in Mrs. Stillman's palm shortly before Christmas Day and about the presentation of Erskine's book, "The Private Life of Helen of Troy."

"John, that will be one of the greatest stories that ever broke," Stansbury declared.

"Yes," agreed Winkler. "But it can't even be hinted at, at this time. Publicity now might precent possible reconciliation. It is confidential stuff."

"May I work on it myself?" asked the managing editor.

"No siree," was the reply. "I am telling you this much so you may be prepared soon to crack a yarn that will stun the country. I trust you."

Stansbury put out his hand.

"Shake," he said. "I'll do as you say, provided you give us the best break you can when it's ready."

One word, a handshake, and it was agreed.

The bargain was kept by Winkler, Feb. 5. The night before, he had arranged a party for Mrs. Stillman at the New York apartment of a friend. In accepting Mrs. Stillman wrote him a letter, since reproduced in part in facsimile in the American, declaring she presumed that the men there would be "men, not Gods," and in which she told him in black and white that could be photographed, engraved and printed that she was going to sail Friday on the Olympic with "James A."

Winkler had obtained her implicit confidence. She could and did trust him to use his judgment in telling the story.

Friday came. Winkler had a 3,000-word story already written and in the American office, ready to be printed, if everything went well.

What New York newspaper man would not know and recognize Anne Stillman at sight? Better not take chances of recognition by ship news men. Winkler drove to the pier with Mrs. Stillman. They slipped up the plank down which friends of those leaving on the Olympic were hurrying back to the dock. The Stillmans were under assumed names, of course. But Mrs. Stillman's well-known penchant for riotous colors must be concealed. On Winkler's advice a plain hat, pulled down over the eyes, replaced the brilliant orange toque. A rusty shop girl's cloak covered her expensive wrap.

Out of sight of reporters and passengers in a stateroom the self-styled "ex-Park avenue reporter" was soon alone with the couple who had been at swords' point so long. He had not yet obtained a statement from Mr. Stillman, still anxious to hide from publicity's glare. He dragged open a bureau drawer and snatched from it the covering paper. Borrowing a pencil from Mr. Stillman he started to write:

"We are sailing together on the Olympic to settle our troubles in our own way."

He was ready to stop then. That was enough. At Mr. Stillman's request another paragraph was added to the effect they were going to see their daughter in Paris.

This scribbled release of a sensational beat was signed by both Mr. and Mrs. Stillman. It was the first time in many years their signatures had appeared jointly on a statement.

Rushing from the boat to a telephone, Winkler called the Hearst number, Beekman 2000, and said to Stansbury, "It's all right. Let it go."

Stansbury carried the story to the composing room himself and the Stillman name once again blazed out in fat, black type—this time reporting an end to dramatic malodorous discord.

Still the story is untold of how Winkler became such a friend and adviser to Mrs. Stillman that she gave him first break over many another reporter whom she had met during those fighting years.

"She is a damned good newspaper woman" is the praise Winkler gave Mrs. Stillman. "She knew her fight must be won by public opinion. She must get down and talk to the masses to win. She was willing to stand vulgarity, but if possible she wished to avoid cheapness. It was what 95 per cent of the people seemed to want. To her the whole case became a psychological struggle. We must get everyone on our side, she reasoned, believing that she could not ignore the public as her husband was trying to do. The public was entitled to its news, even when it concerned a dirty scandal. She could be independent. She is a poet. She could write. She is an actress and the stage would pay big prices to her. But she felt her children were entitled to a full share of the Stillman wealth.

"All right, then early in the case we decided we would try to win over the 95 per cent—the masses. We would make the cooks weep into their flap jacks. Hearst was willing to play the popular side big, to sell the papers, and I was willing to work for Hearst for the money in it and the amusement, too. I think we succeeded all around.

Now with the latest story, it seems the propaganda is directed at the 5 per cent the intelligent. The stories are about analysis—Jung—Baynes—Freud, the witty satire, "The Private Life of Helen of Troy," Houseman's poetry. Will that win?

The Stillman case became public in March, 1921, although court action had been filed in July of the year before in Carmel, N. Y. Winkler's first tip to the story was an annonymous paragraph of about 200 words in Town Topics in the late summer of 1920. This paragraph did not name names. It merely hinted of a terrific society scandal which would never be told publicly. From the magazine, the American reporter learned who wrote the piece, and from him finally learned who the couple were.

He also learned from this source that Mrs. Stillman, unknown to anyone, maintained a private office in 50 E. 42d street and that she employed a very intelligent girl as her secretary. Winkler found the room but could not gain admittance. The building superintendent declared he had no idea who had rented the office. The renting agents would not tell. The day he was leaving for his summer vacation, Winkler on the way to his train at the Grand Central decided to stop in and have one more try.

The door opend to his knock. The girl who let him in was Estelle Klee, Mrs. Stillman's secretary, now dead. Winkler turned on all the "personality pressure" he could—"and that's half the battle breaking a story big or little," he asserted, "you've got to give your subject something before you can expect him to return the compliment". After half an hour's cheery chat, Miss Klee took the newspaperman's card and promised to help him if she were ever in a position to do so.

The chance call proved the groundwork which eventually broke literally, dozens of big "Stillman stories" for the American. Returning from his vacation, Winkler notified his office he was on the trail of a big story, and set out to cultivate an acquaintance with Miss Klee.

Eight months from the time when the tip was first printed in Town Topics, the story was cracked. Mrs. Stillman barricaded herself in Lakewood, N. J., and refused to see any of the news men or "sob sisters" sent over there on the story. Mr. Stillman also refused to talk. Every effort was being made to suppress the story, according to Winkler.

"Attempts were being made to bring influence to bear on the business offices," Winkler said. "No definite facts were being printed. There was simply a surge of black ink."

About this time a tip drifted in to the American that Stillman had been seen frequently entering the Hotel Plaza on the quiet 58th street side with a women and a baby. Winkler went up to investigate, and verified the report. Bills were being paid, he found, on checks of the New York Trust Company, subsidiary of the National City Bank, of which Mr. Stillman was then president, and the checks were signed Florence Lincoln. Simultaneously with publication of the Stillman suit, this Florence Lincoln had left the Plaza with her baby. Questioning porters, clerks and baggage men, Winkler found the man who had carried the Lincoln baggage to a new address on East 86th street. Meanwhile, some detective work had uncovered some details about this Florence Lincoln, or "Flo" Leeds, as she is best known.

One evening Winkler reached the point where he thought he could break the sensational story which would link Mr. Stillman's name with "Flo" Leeds. Victor Watson, then managing editor, was holding an edition for it. Winkler went to the number on 86th street, taking with him the best picture in the files of James A. He learned the name of the building superintendent and called on him.

"See here, Mr. ——— ———," he said, laying the picture on the table before him, and calling him by name. "Let's not have any camouflage. I work for William Randolph Hearst." He gave him a couple of two-for-a-quarter cigars.

"We know that this gentleman, a lady and a baby were or are living here. The name is perhaps Lincoln or it may be Leeds. Here's his picture. Do you recognize him?"

The man grinned.

"The last people who showed me that picture said he had been in an automobile accident and told me that I could never identify it."

"Come on," laughed Winkler. "Let's go out and have a drink."

They left the house for a saloon around the corner. On the way Winkler paused to tell another staff man who had come with him to 'phone the office and keep the edition open.

After a few drinks, the man became more loquacious. He identified the picture, and declared the man in the photograph was posing as the husband of Florence Leeds. That their baby was named John K. Winkler—on the spot for the news to fill page one.

Jay Ward Leeds. They had moved, he said, to another flat on Park avenue.

Back at the apartment house, the picture was also identified by the superintendent's wife, the dusky elevator man, and the door man. All said Mr. Stillman had posed in that house as the woman's husband, and was known to them as father of the boy.

On the slender thread of evidence obtained from these four people, Winkler, after telephoning Victor Watson, went down to the American office and wrote two columns and a half of what proved to be perhaps the most sensational expose of the entire case.

The next day at his home in Forest Hills, L. I., Winkler received a telephone call from Mrs. Stillman. In her throaty contralto, she asked him if he wouldn't come and see her at her home at 910 5th avenue. Then began a friendship between Mrs. Stillman and the reporter which continued all through the case, and resulted in last week's story. Winkler became then what he frankly terms now Mrs. Stillman's publicity advisor.

Next week will be told how Winkler obtained the "Deadly Parallel Story" in the Stillman case, a story which Bradford Merrill has called the best human interest story in the history of journalism. The former American reporter will also relate how the daughter Anne Stillman's renunciation of her father was engineered.

A.P. TO REWARD CAPT. FRIED

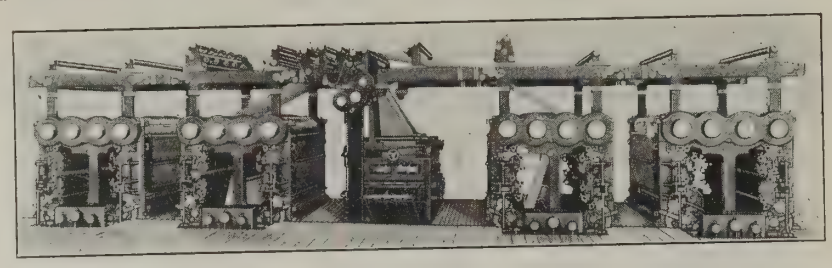
New York Advertising Club to Be Scene of Welcome

Because they "accepted and promptly filled Associated Press assignments at critical moments," the A. P. this week announced the association's award for news reporting, a gold watch, would be presented to both Capt. George Fried of the President Roosevelt, and Commander John Rodgers, commander of last summer's airplane flight to Hawaii. They will be the first two non-newspapermen ever to receive this special tribute.

The Advertising Club of New York, will be the scene of welcoming ceremonies for Capt. Fried next Tuesday. Following a parade, the Mayor's reception committee will bring the captain and the rescue crew to the Park avenue club house for lunch.

When the PN-9 No. 1 and its crew were found near Hawaii after having been given up as lost, the A. P. asked Commander Rodgers to write his own news story of the crew's adventure. This he did in clear and direct style. When the Roosevelt wirelessed it was going to the rescue of the Antinoe crew, the A. P. asked Capt. Fried to aid in telling the public of the effort, and the captain made good on his news assignment.

The last regular A. P. staff man to be honored with the special award was L. C. Probert, head of the Washington bureau. He will probably make the presentation to Commander Rodgers in Washington, while Jackson S. Elliot, assistant general manager, also a winner of the prize, is expected to pay the tribute to Capt. Fried.



Leadbetter Buys Paper Company

Fred W. Leadbetter has added to his extensive paper mill interests on the Pacific Coast by buying the controlling interest in the Oregon Pulp & Paper Company of Salem. Leadbetter bought $1,000,000 in stock from E. S. Collins and C. K. Spaulding and offered $25 above par for all stock outstanding. Leadbetter is a son-in-law of the late H. L. Pittock, publisher of the Portland Oregonian, and has other large paper manufacturing enterprises.

PRESS BUILT UNDER NEW DUPLEX PATENT

DUPLEX PATENTS NEW INTERCHANGEABLE UNIT

Bechman Invention Provides Similar Base Frame for Various Units Allowing Arrangement in Any Desired Relation

A patent covering three new principles of printing press construction, was recently issued to the Duplex Printing Press Company of Battle Creek, Mich., assignee, embodying novel and progressive ideas along the line of unit construction.

Henry F. Bechman, vice-president and factory superintendent is the inventor, and his patent is listed as number 1,569,065 in Washington.

"The object of the invention in the device covered by the patent is threefold," according to a statement from the press company.

"Primarily, to use the words of the patent as issued, it is to provide a novel printing press construction having printing units, folding units and feed roller units capable of being arranged in any desired relation, and which press can be enlarged at any time by the addition of similar printing units or folding units or feed roller units, or altered by the changing of relative positions of such units in accord with the growth of the paper without necessitating alterations or additions other than the addition or shifting of the units themselves, the various units being relatively so formed that they are capable of being interconnected in any desired relation, or rearranged and interconnected in changed relation to make a press of any desired total page capacity or any desired alignment of printing units, folding units and feed roller units.

Another object of the invention is the novel means for independently handling and driving in synchronism all these mechanisms whatever arrangement of units may be used.

"By means of this ultimate and absolute standardization of construction the rearrangement of the Sextuple unit an Octuple or five roll machine, with alteration of relative positions becomes very simple as compared with any which heretofore existed. Never before in the history of printing presses has a press been so simply, compactly and so efficiently designed that in a long row of units it would be possible to shift press units and folder units back and forth interchangeably, just like dominos in a row to get new arrangements or facilities which might be desirable in accord with growth and requirements of changing conditions.

"The patent includes a series of claims covering many aspects of the invention. The breadth of coverage which has been granted to the Duplex Printing Press Company has a totally novel development, one of real merit, value and efficiency is indicated by the first claim which we print here in full:

"Claim 1: In a printing press a plurality of similar printing units and a folder unit, each of said units having a similar base frame whereby the said units are interchangeable in position and may be arranged in any desired relation.

"The advantage of this feature will be readily appreciated by all publishers who have ever faced the problem of enlarging pressroom facilities with a machine on hand which is capable of no re-adjustment in any way. It will also be appreciated by those who have wanted to swing on a permanent basis from one type of product to another and so organize on a different output scheme their printing units and folder deliveries, only to find when trying to plan along such lines that existing press units and folders could not be re-arranged and aligned with these to meet such requirements.

ST. JOSEPH GAZETTE TO BE SOLD FEB. 23

Trustee for Second Mortgage Bondholders to Auction Daily to Highest Bidder to Straighten Finances

The plant and all property of the New Gazette Company, publisher of the St. Joseph (Mo.) Gazette, is being advertised for sale by the First Trust Company of St. Joseph, trustee for the second mortgage bondholders. The sale will take place at the east front of the courthouse, between the hours of 10 a. m. and 5 p. m., Feb. 23.

According to officers of the Gazette company this proceeding is not expected to interfere with the publication of the newspaper. It has been brought about largely as the result of a failure to agree as to the financing of the company, between the stockholders and the bondholders. It is not an unfriendly proceeding, it was said.

When the New Gazette Company was organized about twenty years ago bonds of $50,000 bearing 6 per cent interest were issued. These became due Aug. 1, 1925, and though all the interest coupons were paid, the bonds themselves remain unpaid.

When the late George A. McClellan took charge of the newspaper about three years ago, another issue of bonds dated Aug. 1, 1923, known as second mortgage bonds, were put out amounting to $75,000, making a total bonded indebtedness of $125,000. Part of the second mortgage bonds were due Aug. 1, 1925, the same date that the first issue of $50,000 fell due.

Holders of the first mortgage bonds have been making demands for their money. In order to protect themselves the holders of the second mortgage bonds are offering the property for sale. The first mortgage bondholders will have to be satisfied first.

The Gazette was sold in May, 1923, by C. D. Morris to George A. McClellan, who was killed in a motor car accident Nov. 5, 1924. R. D. Van Alstin was manager of the paper, following Mr. McClellan's death, until he removed to Florida last fall. Since that time O. L. Chenoweth has been acting manager.

Douglas Rejoins Washington Post

Walter Eugene Douglas recently of the Hearst newspapers and in charge of classified advertising on the Baltimore News and American will return to the Washington Post as classified advertising manager. Mr. Douglas has been on the Dallas Times-Herald for the past seven months. Mr. Douglas, at a previous time occupied the post of classified manager of the Washington daily.

WEEKLIES PRAISED FOR "PLAYING DOWN" CRIME

Michigan Attorney General Criticises Big Dailies for Crime Treatment at Meeting of State Press Group

Bouquets for the rural press and brickbats for the metropolitan dailies for their respective attitudes toward crime news were hurled by O. L. Smith, assistant attorney general of the state, in an address last week delivered before a banquet session of the Michigan Press Association, Convention held at Michigan State College, East Lansing. The association is made up of the leading publishers of weekly newspapers of the state and the convention was attended by about 120 small town editors and publishers.

Mr. Smith praised the rural newspapermen for refusing to give crime news a "play" and instead suppressing "unwholesome details of sordid cases." He declared that the country press has been a bulwark against publication of "smut and crime news" because its editors take into consideration the fact that their publications enter the homes. He maintained that this attitude has been helpful in counteracting the "present-day revolt against authority."

The state's attorney criticized the big city press which he declared has proved itself an organ of discord. He said that eagerness of metropolitan dailies to print crime news frequently leads them to publish facts which should not be brought out until the trial, resulting, he claimed, in huge extra cost to the state and county, through informing the public too thoroughly of the details of notorious cases and thus prejudicing prospective jurors.

Among the other speakers who appeared before the association were: George Adams, pioneer publisher of Fowlerville; Roy C. Vandercook, manager of the Michigan Railroads Association; W. J. Keyes, Canadian publisher, who talked on "Creating Advertising that Will Command Better Prices"; Wade Mills, president of the state bar association; H. C. Hotaling of St. Paul, Minn.; and Schuyler Marshall, publisher of the Clinton County Republican-News of St. Johns.

Mr. Marshall was elected president of the association for the ensuing year with Hiram Johnson of the Saranac Advertiser, vice-president, and Herbert A. Wood, Bangor Advance, re-elected secretary-treasurer.

Plans were approved during the business session for compiling and publishing a Michigan "preferred list" of rural newspapers. Information to be included will pertain to circulation, size, and advertising rates.

An invitation extended by Harbor Springs, to entertain the Association at its mid-year outing June 10-12, was accepted.

Mrs. Vesta Hardy Vandeveer of Detroit was elected president of the Michigan Women's Press Association which also held its annual convention at Michigan State College at East Lansing.

CLAIMS MOST FEATURES

Sebring (Fla.) American Said to Lead State in News and Syndicate Services

Coincident with its announcement of election to membership in the Associated Press the Sebring (Fla.) Daily American laid claim to having the greatest array of news and feature services of any newspaper in Florida. The list is especially interesting in view of the fact that the American is published in a city of only 8,000.

Included in the list of services beside the Associated Press are International News Service, Universal Service Central Press Association, King Features, McNaught features and several of the Chicago Tribune leading satellities.

The American recently supplemented its composing room equipment with a new intertype and monotype-rule castor and is turning out an average of 10 and 12 pages on week-days and 28 on Sundays.

KENDALL BILL FRIENDS SCORE IN HEARING

Roe, Spokesman for National Editorial Association, Argues Forcefully Before House Sub-Committee to End Post Office Competition With Job Shops on Envelope Printing

By J. BART CAMPBELL

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11.—The organized fight of the National Editorial Association and similar bodies to compel the post office department to cease the printing and sale of stamped envelopes at the expense of the small publisher and job printer reached a smashing climax yesterday before the sub-committee of the House Committee on Post Offices and Post Doads.

Herman Roe, vice-president of the national editorial association, brought the hearings started last week to a dramatic close by riddling the arguments advanced by Joseph Stewart, executive assistant to the Postmaster General, in favor of the Post Office Department being permitted to continue in the printing business.

Stamping as "unfair competition" with private business interests the government's contract with a Dayton (Ohio) concern for turning out printed stamped envelopes at a cheaper rate than the small publisher and job printer can profitably furnish them, Mr. Roe questioned seriously Mr. Stewart's contention that the post office department is making a profit out of the "envelope business."

Mr. Roe's statement before the committee supplied not only complete rebuttal of the Post Office position, but was considered to have done much to insure the passage of the Kendall Bill, although Mr. Daley warned that the fight is not yet by any means won and the publishing and job printing interests concerned must remain "on guard."

Mr. Roe's statement was in part as follows:

"There are five disputable points on which I would like to speak:

"1—Public convenience.

"2—Established custom.

"3—Ethical considerations involved in modifying the contract.

"4—The benefit which would accrue to the large printers and not to the small-own job printers.

"5—Costs.

"Public convenience—it is admitted that the stamped envelope is a convenience to that part of the public that avails itself of it, but we can see no reason why any particular part of the public should be favored at the expense of legitimate business; and it is not the proper function of the government to furnish certain services which can be furnished by private enterprise.

"What a convenience it would be if the housewife living on the farm could tell her postman each day how many loaves of bread to bring her tomorrow—his bread being delivered to her at a price from 10 to 50 per cent less than it would be purchased in town after a three-hour drive.

"Established custom—this point was adequately covered by Congressman Watson of Minnesota, who stated that because an injustice had been established for a long time there was no reason for its continuance. As a matter of fact, the original intent of the stamped envelope, when first introduced in 1853, was to keep private individuals from competing with the government in the handling of the mails.

"Ethical considerations involved in the contract—it already has been clearly established that from a legal standpoint the government has the right to modify the contract in any way it sees fit.

"If the contractor had been forced to provide new machinery, new equipment and a new investment to carry out this contract, a reduction of the amount of business he anticipated might perhaps be fair. As a matter of fact, however, the present contractor has enjoyed this business for the past 20 years without any possibility of effective outside competition. The lucrativeness of the contract is best shown by the fact that from an original investment of $300,000 the money invested in the contractor's business has grown to over $8,000,000, and in addition very substantial yearly dividends have been paid. We do not think that a reduction in the volume that the contractor would supply, if the Kendall Bill were immediately passed, would cause any hardship to the contractor. As a matter of fact, he would be left with an extremely lucrative business.

"Of the total number of 2,997,177,409 stamped envelopes and newspaper wrappers issued during the fiscal year 1925 there were 1,475,090,034, or 49.2 per cent of the whole, bearing the purchaser's printed 'corner card.'

"In this per cent, the contractor receives for the printing of 1,000 envelopes on an average of .02 cents above the price he receives for the plain stamped envelopes. Everyone knows the contractor cannot do the printing for that insignificant sum. He gets his margin of profit on the envelopes. If the unprofitable part of this contract is eliminated, as provided for in the Kendall Bill, his contract will be all the more valuable, because it is reasonable to assume that he will be called upon to furnish a much larger volume of plain stamped envelopes.

"We dispute that the passage of the Kendall bill will benefit the large printer rather than the small town country printer—this matter was touched upon in the testimony of Mr. Conrath.

"It is impossible for the large printer located in large centers to reach out of his own city for orders running less than 5,000. Orders for 5,000 envelopes or less are invariably furnished by small printers who buy envelopes from paper houses and who may purchase plain government envelopes for this purpose.

"It is an actual experience of small printers that the small lots of printed envelopes used in the community are purchased from him when they are not bought from the department. It is only reasonable to suppose that if the government withdraws from the printing business, the small orders will be given to the small printers.

"Statistics compiled by the Post Office show that of the total orders for stamped envelopes received, approximately 72.60 per cent are for envelopes in lots of 500 and 1,000. The lots of 500 are slightly in excess of the lots of 1,000 ordered. Government costs—we wish to cite the procedure orders for stamped envelopes go through:

"Let us assume a householder on a rural route in California wants to purchase 500 stamped envelopes with a special return address printed thereon—the procedure would be:

"The carrier must take time to write out the order and give a receipt for such deposit as may be required. (Under the rules of the Post Office Department, purchaser can order stamped envelopes and deposit only the cost above the value of the stamps), the carrier gives this order to his postmaster and gets a receipt for the deposit. The postmaster must check the order and mail it to Washington in an envelope without a stamp affixed.

"When this order reaches Washington, it is transmitted to the stamp division, opened, examined and listed on another form; checked by clerks; passed on to the assistant superintendent and to the superintendent of the stamp division; then to the Third Assistant Postmaster General; from there to the purchasing agent. Purchasing agent reviews it, checks it and sends it to the stamped envelope agency at Dayton in an envelope without stamp affixed.

"At Dayton, Government clerks open it, examine it and pass it on to the contractor. When the order is filled by the contractor, it is turned over to Government clerks in the stamped envelope agency at Dayton. They check it and see that it conforms with the requisition, and issue a receipt to the contractor. The envelopes are then turned over to the mail service for delivery.

"The package is hauled by a Government truck from the plant to the railroad station. It is then handled as registered mail in the mail cars. It is receipted for by the mail clerk and, because of the value of the stamps, it is watched by each clerk and kept under constant surveillance. Every clerk through whose hands it passes to its destination has to receipt for it.

"In the course of transit, it is frequently necessary to transfer from one train to another, in which case it is placed on a truck segregated from other mail matter and accompanied by a clerk through this railroad station to another train departing from the same station. In case it is necessary to transfer across town and dispatch from another depot, a clerk must accompany the baggage truck containing the stamped envelope shipment to the motor truck, where it is loaded in a motor truck. A clerk must accompany it to the other station and follow clear through on baggage trucks to mail car and see that it is loaded in the mail car. The clerk on duty in such mail car, after checking, issues a receipt to the clerk from whom the package has been received.

"When it arrives at its destination, the clerk must remain in the mail car until it is unloaded; follow it through the railroad station to the motor truck; ride in the motor truck to the post office, and follow it from the platform to the postmaster. The postmaster, after checking registry bills, gives a receipt to the railway postal clerk.

"The postmaster then notifies the purchaser by filling out a card form notice addressed to the purchaser that the envelopes have arrived, and this is put in the mails in the same manner as postal card and other mail matter, and is delivered free of postage to the purchaser.

"If a rural carrier delivers the stamped envelope order, the postmaster would obtain a receipt from the carrier for the order, and the carrier would have to notify the patron to meet him at the mail box to receive this shipment. The carrier then turns in the remainder of the purchase price to the postmaster and obtains a receipt from the postmaster.

"The postmaster, upon receipt of the remainder of the purchase price, must make proper record in his accounts. The remittance is transferred to Washington through the usual channels, involving considerable accounting—all this for 500 envelopes at the Government price of 91 cents for 500 No. 3 envelopes.

"If an individual sent 500 envelopes from Dayton to any zone in the country, by first class mail, he would be forced to pay 32 cents for each pound. Five hundred envelopes, with container weighing approximately five pounds, would make the cost of shipment $1.60 for weight plus 15 cents registry fee—$1.75 total. The Post Office Department ships each envelope order by first class mail. It states that the purchaser of these envelopes pays the total transportation charge, but it is difficult to understand how that is possible. Stamped envelope users receive the envelopes by first class mail, but do they pay for that service? If not, they are the only class of individuals thus privileged.

"Even if the 500 envelopes were shipped via parcel post to the fourth zone, which embraces a radius from 600 to 1,000 miles and is considered the average zone, the cost would be 25 cents, not including registry fee or insurance."

BLOCK PURCHASES COMPLETE CONTROL OF NEWARK STAR-EAGLE

After Buying Interests of Talmadge, Buggie and Vernam, He Announces Insurance Plan and Full Holiday and Vacation Pay for All Employes

THE news has just come out that two weeks ago, Paul Block, who has been one of the owners of the Newark Star-Eagle since he bought it at the receiver's sale in 1916, has purchased the interests owned by his partners and friends, Harry S. Talmadge and Fred S. Buggie of the Toledo Blade, and Clarence C. Vernam of the Street & Smith Publishing Company of New York.

PAUL BLOCK

The price paid for the interests just purchased by Mr. Block is on the basis of ten for one as compared with the price that was paid for the property when purchased from the receivers in 1916, which was about $230,000.

Harry Auth, who has been associated with the Star, which later became the Star-Eagle, for over twenty-five years, and who has been its manager for over ten years, has been made vice-president and general manager.

The Star-Eagle is the second largest newspaper in the state of New Jersey. Its circulation is now just under 90,000 per day, which is close to three times as much as it was when first purchased by Mr. Block and his associates.

Mr. Block gives credit to Harry Talmadge and Fred S. Buggie, as well as Mr. Auth, for most of this accomplishment.

Mr. Block is interested in other newspaper properties, including the Duluth Herald, the Memphis News-Scimitar and the Lancaster New Era.

At a "get-together dinner," held by employees of the Star-Eagle, Feb. 8, new policies, under the new ownership, were announced. More than 300 staff members attended.

The newspaper employees were told of plans for the betterment of their conditions and the protection of their families.

A plan of group insurance, the premiums on which will be paid by the company, was announced.

Persons who have been in the employ of the newspapers for one year and less than three years are insured for $1,500; employees for three years and less than five years, for $2,000; employees for five years and less than ten years, $2,500, and employees for ten years or longer, for $3,000.

It also was announced that all employees of the mechanical departments of the newspaper shall hereafter receive full pay for holidays and a week's vacation annually with pay.

This announcement was a surprise not only to Star-Eagle mechanical employees, but to members of the printing trades in general. The mechanical departments deal with the publishers through their unions and pay for holidays and vacations with pay are not among their demands.

Mr. Auth, who was toastmaster, reviewed the history of the Star-Eagle and told of plans for its improvement.

Advertising has kept pace with growth in circulation, and Mr. Auth reported to his employees a gain of more than 1,000,000 lines of advertising patronage last year.

What was considered by Mr. Auth as more important than either circulation and advertising gains was the fact that the Star-Eagle today enjoys the goodwill and respect of a great majority of the people of Newark and vicinity.

Many of the employees present have been with the Star-Eagle for from twenty-five years to fifty years. These, as their names were called by Mr. Auth, rose and were introduced to Mr. Block.

Herman Halsted, who has been associated in business with Mr. Block since 1893, read several letters showing the esteem in which Mr. Block is held by his business associates, his employees, and men of importance in business and public life. Twenty-six of his executives who signed a congratulatory letter on the twenty-fifth business anniversary of the publisher recently have been in his employ for an average of over seventeen years.

Charles Boyle, who has been with Mr. Block's organization for twenty years, also said a few words of praise for the publisher. He stressed the democratic spirit of the director of the Star-Eagle, saying the humblest newsboy in the organization would be as welcome at the office of Mr. Block as the manager.

Mr. Block in addressing the employees reviewed briefly his thirty years' experience in the advertising and newspaper business, and declared that the friendships he had formed had been the most valuable fruits of his activities. He related the circumstances of his purchase of the Star-Eagle, ten years ago, and told in a most interesting way of the continued growth and prosperity enjoyed by the Star-Eagle since that time.

"My ambition," said Mr. Block, "is to see the Star-Eagle continue its progress. With the cooperation of the employees I am confident this will be brought about."

E. J. Madden, president of Newark Typographical Union No. 103, was one of the first to issue a statement in praise of Mr. Block's generosity. He said:

"I have worked on the Star-Eagle for seventeen years. My surprise at Mr. Block's act is only exceeded by my gratification. We have never experienced anything like this before. We have in the past sold our services and expected nothing more than a day's pay in return. As long as the employer met those demands we classed him as 'fair.' We've got to class Mr. Block as more than fair.

"Pay for holidays, life insurance and vacations are things we do not demand. Mr. Block has seen fit to give them without the asking. We must appreciate it to the full—and we do.

"This action not only helps and pleases employes of the Newark Star-Eagle. It's a big thing for our craft and to all labor organizations in Newark and will no doubt have its effect elsewhere.

"We take off our hats to Mr. Block and hope our efforts in the future will make him want to take off his hat to us."

H. H. Hughes, president of Newark Stereotypers' Union No. 18, also an employe of the Star-Eagle was equally generous in his praise of the plan.

"Mr. Block," he said, "has set an example that should be followed generally in the printing trades of Newark. His action was entirely voluntary and shows that he is interested in the welfare of all his employes, regardless of whether they deal with him as individuals or through trades unions."

"The men in the pressroom are pleased by Mr. Block's generous offer of free insurance, a week's vacation with pay and pay for all holidays," said Bert Cox, foreman of the pressroom today. "It's a foregone conclusion that the men will reciprocate this generosity. Our men often have mourned rather than enjoyed a holiday because of their loss of a day's pay each time. This is particularly true of the married men, of whom we have many. These men could not always afford a vacation, and heretofore they have kept constantly at their grind fifty-two weeks year in and year out."

Mr. Block is president of Paul Block, Inc., special agency, which represents some of the leading newspapers of the country. He began his career a little more than 30 years ago with the Elmira (N. Y.) Telegram. He was born and reared in Elmira. On the Telegram he did both reportorial work and advertising.

Leaving Elmira in 1895, he joined the special agency of A. Frank Richardson, New York, who then represented the Telegram and 20 other papers. Three years later he started in business for himself, and has represented newspapers ever since.

At that time, his force consisted of a young lady stenographer and an errand boy. Today Mr. Block has an organization of 27 men associated with him in looking after the national advertising of the publishers he represents. Of the 27, all but seven have been with him for more than 20 years. Among them are Herman G. Halsted, Charles J. Boyle, Cornelius Regan, Arthur Thurnau, Gilbert Falk, Nigel Cholmely-Jones, William Messiter, Peyton Bevins, Richard Mamlok, Herbert Haskell, and Samuel Schmid.

In the first year he was in business for himself, in spite of his very small organization, Mr. Block lost $3,600. In 1924 Mr. Block's expenses alone for running his special agency organization was more than $600,000. The writer was shown the audit by Ernst & Ernst, giving these figures.

This vast change in the expense of running a publishers representative organization from the day when Mr. Block first started to the present time, Mr. Block pointed out, as indicative of how the newspaper business has grown in 30 years in size and importance.

VACATIONS FOR PIECE WORKERS

Mergenthaler Company Announces New Policy for Employes

Vacations with pay are to be granted piecework and hourly employes of the Mergenthaler Linotype Company, according to an announcement issued by Norman Dodge, vice-president and general manager of the company.

"During the summer of 1926," it said, "a vacation, with pay at the hourly rate, will be granted to the hourly and piecework employes of the Brooklyn plant as follows:

"One week to employes who at the beginning of the vacation period have been continuously in the service of the company for at least one full year.

"To each employe who, at the beginning of the vacation period, has been in the service of the company less than one year, a vacation of one day for each two months of continuous service prior to that time.

"The above applies only to employees in the service of the company at the time the vacation period begins."

The granting of the vacation with pay in 1926 is not to be considered a precedent for future years. It is being tried as an experiment with the feeling that, as expressed by many of the employees, they will be benefited and will be more efficient for having this rest, the announcement said.

"METERED PUBLICITY" TRIED IN MINNEAPOLIS

Auto Show Numbers of Journal and Tribune Limit Each Advertiser to Five Inches of News—Write-ups for Small Advertisers on Sliding Scale—Linage Increased

By HILTON HORNADAY

Automobile Editor, Minneapolis Tribune

EDITORIAL NOTE.—Mr. Hornaday tells a lucid story of this novel effort to control automobile publicity. It is the first notable instance of co-operation between local newspapers against raids on their space and advertising rates, and may mean the end of the puffery in automobile show editions. While EDITOR & PUBLISHER believes that free publicity, like the tail of the dog, should be cut off "right back of the ears," it hails this as a step in the right direction.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Feb. 8.—The Minneapolis Tribune and the Minneapolis Journal issued their annual automobile editions Sunday, Feb. 7, in connection with the Twin City auto show, and although the newspapers limited the automobile publicity to an absolute maximum of five inches of reading matter for each make of car, the total automobile advertising of both papers in the show numbers exceeded the total linage of automobile advertising in their show numbers of a year ago.

It was apparent from the editions that the departure was made with the belief that the automotive industry would be better served by eliminating excess publicity and substituting certain kinds of news articles which editorial experience has taught are bound to be read by the motor car buying public.

Despite this change in policy, the Tribune carried 67,569 lines of automobile advertising, as compared with 54,424 lines of automobile advertising in its show edition a year ago.

The Journal carried 69,640 lines of automobile advertising in this year's show number as compared with 60,339 lines a year ago.

In the automobile sections, all reading matter of both papers dealt with the auto show and with the general non-advertising features about the industry. The division of space was held as closely as possible to 25 per cent editorial and 75 per cent advertising, for there were no cuts of cars or individuals, except officers of the show organization and outstanding figures in the automobile industry who are to visit Minneapolis and St. Paul during show week.

The only straight publicity matter for cars and trucks consisted of one item for each car or truck, not more than five inches in length. Most of these ran shorter. These were not written in the language commonly used in automobile publicity stories, but were confined to facts about the models for 1926, together with range of prices and names and addresses of dealers. They followed through the sections in alphabetical order, starting with "Ajax." Heads of each story were set in 12-point type. Cars like Essex and Hudson were given separate items, but there was only one item covering models sold under one name, such as Buick, Studebaker, etc. These five-inch items covered all cars handled in the northwest by dealers, whether they were advertised or not. A list of cars exhibited at the show was printed separately.

The only other publicity dealt with other concerns actually advertising in the show number. These items were limited in space by the amount of advertising used. For the advertiser using from 10 to 20 inches, there was given one inch of publicity, bulked under a general heading such as "Notes of the Automotive World."

Advertisers using from 20 to 40 inches were given not more than two inches; from 40 to 80 inches, not more than three inches, and advertisers using 80 inches or more, not more than four inches of publicity, including head. All these items, outside of those grouped in notes, were given subordinate heading and were used as fillers following the publicity given cars and trucks.

The show numbers carried a schedule of dealers' meetings during the week, announcing speakers and other meetings, but this was handled in tabular form, without any taint of special publicity. In another story was a catalog of the outstanding figures in the automotive industry who were scheduled to visit the show.

Putting out a show number of such a character required diplomacy on the part of the editorial men in contact with dealers and advertisers. It was found that it was not necessary to explain the publicity policy to men in the trade other than to state, when unreasonable requests for publicity were made, that the newspapers were going to try to make the show number more interesting to the reader and therefore more valuable to the industry and especially to the advertisers who were to be represented in the two editions.

These papers printed from 60 to 80 columns of newsy material relating to the automobile world. Elimination of the ordinary kind of publicity enabled them to print longer and more complete analytical stories about the 1926 makes of cars in general.

Material of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce was used and other material came from the Minneapolis Automobile Club, the Minnesota State Automobile Club, the Automotive Division of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the United States Department of Commerce, the U. S. Bureau of Public Roads, the State Highway Department, and there were stories on registration, gasoline taxes, tourists, etc.

DOES HE GET HIS RENT FREE?

THE SHREDDED WHEAT COMPANY
NIAGARA FALLS, N.Y.

TRUMAN A. DEWEESE
DIRECTOR OF PUBLICITY

January 30, 1926.

Dear Sir:

I have been giving you Shredded Wheat Advertising for twenty years. Would you be willing to give the enclosed "reader" a few complimentary insertions?

While most of my time and thought has been given to Shredded Wheat, I have acted as advertising counsellor for other concerns and have done a great deal to promote the interests of advertising, particularly newspaper advertising.

Having a national reputation as an advertising man I naturally have received a good many inquiries from young people who want to learn advertising. To meet this demand I have prepared thirty lessons which cover all departments of advertising in a very comprehensive way.

In order to give this work the attention it requires I have a separate office in Buffalo operating under the name of National Advertising Service. While the office is in charge of H. M. Parkinson and assistants, all lessons are personally corrected and criticised by myself. Now that I have a perfect organization and equipment for the work, I naturally want more students. Will you help me get them? Please use the enclosed envelope for your reply.

Thanking you in advance for your courtesy,

I remain

Very truly yours,

T. A. DeWeese

Director of Publicity.

T.A.D/M.

THE above letter from Truman A. DeWeese, long and well known to newspaper people as advertising manager of the Shredded Wheat Company, accompanied a little piece of copy. It was only a little piece and would the publishers please do Mr. DeWeese the small favor of printing it free in return for the many big favors he had done them by selling Shredded Wheat through the columns of their papers. Mr. DeWeese is SELLING his course in advertising. He pays rent, presumably, for the new office he has opened as headquarters for the National Advertising Service, as he calls his new enterprise. No doubt he will have suitable bills and letter heads printed to carry on the new business. He will pay the printer for them, though no doubt he has doled out many thousands of dollars worth of printing to the shops that do his company's work. Yet he asks newspaper publishers, many of them pressed for space to handle paid advertising, to donate an inch or two now and then to promoting the commercial enterprise that this copy describes:

A CHANCE TO LEARN ADVERTISING

An opportunity to learn the most interesting and profitable of all professions through home-study correspondence lessons is now offered to young men and young women by a man of long experience and with a national reputation as an advertising expert. No theoretical essays, but practical instruction that fits students for the finest positions. A six month's course. All instruction by mail. For particulars, address

Directors This Week Discuss Labor and Traffic Bureaus—To Oppose Rail Rate Raise on Newsprint

This year's annual meeting of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association will be held at Asheville, N. C., Grove Park Inn, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, July 6-8, according to a decision reached by the Board of Directors in session at Chattanooga, Feb. 9. Victor Hanson, publisher of the Birmingham (Ala.) News was named chairman of the program committee.

Expansion of activities of the S. N. P. A. and development of the work of headquarters office for the individual membership were stressed and authorized to be continued by the board. The board directed that investigations be made about advisability of establishing a labor bureau and traffic bureau at headquarters in Chattanooga. Reports will be made at the annual convention in July for final decision on those activities to be taken up by the association.

The advertising campaign for "selling the South to the nation" was authorized to be continued, with suggestions about active followup work on part of S. N. P. A. headquarters.

Freight rates on newsprint paper from points in Eastern part of the United States and Canada were discussed and a decision reached to actively oppose efforts of the railroads to increase the rates. The matter of state baggage and express rates is engaging attention of the board.

James F. Finlay, attorney for Association, reported to the board on the status of the suit of the Federal Trade Commission against the S. N. P. A. and other newspaper organizations and the Four A's.

On invitation of Mr. Hanson, it was unanimously agreed that the present board would recommend to the incoming board that the 1927 mid-winter meeting of the board be held in Birmingham.

It was decided to extend an invitation to Chancellor J. H. Kirkland, of Vandebilt University, to address the annual convention next July.

President Walter C. Johnson made a report to the board on the work of the association since the convention last July. Manager Cranston Williams reported on status of affairs in headquarters office.

Publishers Cited Under "Blue Laws"

Two Nashville publishers were cited for violation of recently resurrected Sunday "blue laws" 123 years old which prohibit doing business on Sunday. They were J. G. Stahlman, executive director of the Nashville Banner and Luke Lea publisher of the Nashville Tennesseean. The law provides a forfeiture for "any merchant, artificer, tradesman, farmer or any other person found guilty of doing or exercising any of the common avocations of life; or causing or permitting the same to be done by his children or servants—acts of real necessity or charity excepted."

TRAIL BLAZERS OF ADVERTISING

"Free, Gratis, For Nothing" Peddlers

Chapter XXVI

"Free, Gratis, for Nothing" Peddlers

BACK in the days when cigarettes were bought to get the sensationally advertised pictures of actresses in tights; when free lunch was the saloon's masterpiece of publicity, the words "Free—Gratis—For Nothing" were magic in advertising.

There were a bunch of these "Free Schemer" boys drifting about the country putting on stunts. Usually they put up at hotels where free lunch was the main attraction.

From putting on a newspaper free scheme, with $5 as the first prize, and subsisting on free lunch at the Stockholm in Minneapolis, or Los Angeles or El Paso, to selling the Grand Space on Fussy Fifth Avenue with offices in a glittering tower in the midst of the wealth and splendor is some jump. But some of these old "Free Schemers" have come up in the world rapidly and are well fed. I met one recently who had done better than "real well." He had his own agency and a beautiful suburban home all paid for. Yet I remember when he lived on fifteen cents a day, and that wasn't for eats. Five cents bought a glass of beer with unlimited privileges of the free lunch counter.

The great come-on word was "Free"—it was the magic word that drew attention and trade. This word was used in every catching way that clever and resourceful schemers could think of. Some they didn't think of—they helped themselves to the other fellows' ideas and schemes.

The old battle to get business first created a great demand for "Free Schemes." In every kind of a new inducement scheme—the "Absolutely Free"—the "Free Sample"—the "Free Trial"—the "Premium"—the "Souvenir"—the "Coupon"—the "Credit Certificate," etc. there was always found the joker. And the whole success of the advertising depended on the cleverness with which the "joker" was concealed. The "free scheme" concentrated on the weakest point in human nature and played upon it to arouse desire and get action.

If it had not been for the "joker" the free scheme would not have been clever; neither would it have won results. People will grasp at an offer of something for nothing. It was the great come-on which made the public scramble to get something for nothing.

The headline—"This Bowl of Live Gold Fish Free" with a sub-head—"Without a Cent of Money," made people read the advertisement eagerly. But in the body of the copy came the "joker"—"Sell 16 cans of Baking Powder for 50c. per can, presenting each customer with a globe containing two live gold fish." The big "Free" offer was an extra large, two gallon Gold Fish Emporium, containing six, beautiful, fancy, live gold fish for the salesman.

Back in the easy-to-remember yesterdays when Peruna was a national drink, the idea of many advertisers, especially the schemers, was to trick the public into reading an advertisement.

The most popular form of a free contest which the Free Schemers peddled around the country was the voting contest. This scheme was just over the line from the lottery laws. It was not held a lottery because the winner was not investing any money to win a prize. His or her friends spent the money. They were supposed to get their money's worth in the purchase which entitled them to the votes.

The excitement of the contest increased the volume of sales, which enabled the advertiser to give away large money prizes apparently free.

In fact, the advertiser told the public he was giving away colossal prizes absolutely free. But the "joker" said, "This is a little scheme to arouse the gambling instinct and get the people who love to take a chance to spend more money, and then a small percentage of the huge profits go into the prizes."

The old contest for helping churches was worked to death. With every dollar purchase a voting coupon was given. The holder could enter and vote for any church or organization. A $1,000 prize would be offered for the church winning the most votes. This started all the church people buying at that store to help their particular church to win the prize. To keep up interest the church in the lead was presented with 10 votes each week.

A careful analysis of the results showed that the $1,000 was not given away in any sense. The people bought and bought to win the prize and only one church could win.

This was in the yellow journalism period—a period in the development of advertising when the public wanted something for nothing. "Absolutely Free" was a headline with a big pull.

Adventurers in the game, and especially fellows who had clever schemes to sell, found merchants and advertisers alert to buy, because the sensation-craving public demanded them.

One most successful "Absolutely free" offer, which had the "string" carefully buried was sold by a traveling schemer to furniture stores.

"Free—Free—Free" was the headline. A "$25.00 solid brass bed" was offered "free" with every outfit of furniture sold. But how the bed was to be obtained "free" was not told until the last paragraph. Which was followed by this line—"This extremely liberal offer may be withdrawn at any time. Never again will you have a chance like this."

Few people could resist obeying a suggestion when they saw a chance to get a $25.00 bed free slipping away from them.

The man who bought the outfit to get a bed "free" was no more getting the bed free than he could get a trip to Florida free. And yet at that time "Free Trips to Florida" were advertised with vigor.

"Mail this Free Trip Coupon Today" demanded the advertisement, and thousands mailed it, expecting to have a nice, long enjoyable journey at some other man's expense. But before they made the trip they must buy some land, make a deposit or find other buyers for the land.

Had the headlines been changed to read "A $13.75 iron bed with every $300. purchase," instead of a "$25.00 bed free," the ad would not have been a marvelous puller. Or had the land seeker read "Your railroad fare paid if you purchase a $1000 tract of land," there would have been no special trains to Florida. There was a catch in every headline.

But the boys who peddled the Free Prize Puzzle Schemes cleaned up. Large sums of money, jewelry, etc., were offered for solving a simple little puzzle which was so easily solved it was a joke.

For years concerns used the puzzle rebus and guessing schemes to make sales. The puzzle ad was a means of obtaining names. Every one won a prize. But the prize checks sent to all who sent in an answer were not good unless applied on the merchandise to be sold.

Baited advertising has had its day, but it was a clean-up day while it lasted. The open abuse of the word "Free" put it out of business because no one ever expects to get something for nothing these days—not even advice.

True, there were a few scheme promoters, who roped retailers into voting schemes, got theirs early, and departed leaving the retailers to work out the finish the best they could.

On the other hand there were plenty of honest and clever scheme promoters who sold business building contests to retail merchants, manufacturers and communities, boosting business and making money for all concerned.

But the old picturesque days of arousing interest over "free schemes," and getting the public worked up into a feverish heat over getting something absolutely free have passed about into the discard.

IT NEVER CAN HAPPEN AGAIN

By E. Bruce Laughlin Night Ad Foreman, Portland (Ore.) Telegram

The foreman of the ad room lay fainting on the floor,
They raised his head and someone said:
"The poor skate is no more."

The sympathetic printers (with one eye on the clock),
Gazed down at him, their eyes grew dim—
It was an awful shock.

Quoth one: "We must revive him quick, though I'm not one to holler,
If this old jay should pass away
'T will cost us each a dollar."

They bathed his wrists in gasoline and gave him some to drink,
And soon his eyes, to their surprise,
Began to roll and blink.

With halting speech he soon explained what threatened his demise,
I'll say again the facts are plain
Enough to cause surprise:

"A page ad I received this night from a department store;
'Twas all complete and laid out neat,
It was not scribbled o'er;

And that's not all," the foreman raved, "you ancient printer mutts
Will not believe I did receive
This ad with ALL THE CUTS!

The copy was not daubed and gobbed and smeared and messed around,
The margins fair were left quite bare
Where printers' marks are found.

The shock was terrible to me, but then I still feel glad
That without strife, once in my life
ALL CUTS CAME WITH THE AD."

Confined by bars, a babbling wreck, this foreman, gone quite mad,
Tells all the nuts about the cuts
That ALL CAME WITH THE AD!

Chapter XXVII

"Old Home Week" Promoters

RECENTLY the Ohio Society of New York put on an entertainment—two act fun fest—called "Old Home Week in Tickville." It was supposed to be a burlesque on the old time, "Old Home Week," but in many respects it was a true picture of an "Old Home Week" Celebration in a small country town.

Advertising men who are accustomed to the Super-Advertising of the Great White Way and its environs, perhaps do not appreciate that "Old Home Week" celebrations were great advertising events. They were the means of injecting new life into small towns or paralyzed communities.

The promoter of these events of attracting attention to a town was the kind of an advertising man capable of getting a settled community into a state of white heat, feverish excitement, or high blood pressure.

His big line of talk was how his boosting plans would bring new business to the merchants, and add to the population and prosperity of the town.

Big city advertising men have no conception of what it meant to the mental state of a town to put on a celebration that made it become wide awake.

It was just like the old time religious revivals, and just about as lasting.

Street fakers, bunco artists, street fair shows and performers, and fresh traveling salesmen watched for news of Old Home Week celebrations and usually these strangers were the life of the party. They made plenty of work for the town marshall, constable and police judge.

It was also a harvest field for pickpockets and others, who lived by their wits and invisible fingers.

But aside from the trickery and fakirs at these celebrations; in addition to the carnivals, stunts and entertainment given to visitors, there was a mighty serious side. The local promoters had an idea in the back of their heads, and that was to give the old town some whooping publicity. They seriously wanted to put the old burg in the limelight, promote better business and establish a permanent boosting spirit.

And the "Old Home Week" was the scheme to bring new life into town by getting the town-men and farmers to join hands and pull together.

The Detroit News Led In Advertising Every Sunday During 1925

Besides Leading By 140% Week Days

Due to its unusually thorough coverage of the Detroit field—a coverage unequalled by any other paper in any other city of Detroit's size or larger, The News has made many unique advertising records—in 1924 it established the world's record for total volume of advertising and in 1925 it surpassed this record with 33,366,494 lines. Not the least of its 1925 achievements is the following record of leadership Sunday after Sunday, which indicates a steady preference for The Sunday News by all classes of advertisers.

CIRCULATION managers of New York newspapers met Tuesday at the offices of the Publishers Association of New York City, World Building, to discuss methods of impressing upon retail newsdealers the necessity of keeping their stands open on holidays.

There is a growing tendency among retail dealers, it was stated, to close stands on holidays, causing a circulation loss to the dailies of almost one-fifth of normal sales.

A letter signed by the Publishers' Association of New York City is to be sent to all dealers stressing the necessity of keeping their stands open every holiday.

Lester Jones is executive representative of the association.

GLENDALE (CAL.) NEWS SOLD

S. G. McClure, New Owner, Published Youngstown (O.) Telegram 17 Years

Samuel G. McClure, for many years publisher of the Youngstown (O.) Telegram, and now a resident of Pasadena, Cal., has purchased the Glendale (Cal.) Evening News and will re-enter newspaper publishing. Associated with Mr. McClure will be his son-in-law, J. D. Funk, who has been engaged in the banking business in Bloomington, Ill.

The News was purchased from A. T. Cowan, and is the pioneer daily in that community, having been established in 1905.

Mr. McClure began his newspaper work on the Cleveland Leader in 1887. For ten years he was general manager of the Columbus Ohio State Journal and for 17 years was publisher of the Youngstown Telegram. He sold the latter publication about a year ago, coming to Pasadena to retire. The "urge" to return to newspaper work proved too strong, however, and the purchase of the Glendale News marks his return to journalism.

No material changes will be made in the policy of the paper, Mr. McClure stated.

M. C. Moore of Palmer, DeWitt & Palmer, newspaper brokers, New York, negotiated the sale.

Buffalo Post Suspends

The Buffalo Evening Post suspended publication on February 8, announcing in a paid advertisement in other newspapers that this was due to a breakdown of its press and that it would be only temporary. Harvey White, managing editor of the paper, resigned on Feb. 6 to enter another field of work. It was stated in the advertisement The Post would circulate its legal notices and would conform with other existing agreement affecting it.

SHIP NEWS MEN HONORED

Benham, Duffy and Cunningham to B On Roosevelt Welcoming Committee

When the hero ship President Roose velt returns to New York Feb. 15, thre members of the New York Ship News Association will be on the official welcoming committee at the order of Mayor James J. Walker.

The members chosen for the honor ar F. Darius Benham, New York World James E. Duffy, New York Telegram and Harry Cunningham, New York Evening World, and acting president of th association.

The brunt of reporting the Antino rescue story was borne by the ship news men. According to established rule, al wirelessed messages from ships at se are turned over to the association fo distribution to the press by the steamshi companies involved.

In his statement appointing the re porters to the committee, Mayor Walke said:

"My attention has been called by Cap John Milliken, Secretary and Treasure of the Neptune Association, of whic organization most of the merchant marin officers are members, to the very sub stantial contribution made by members o the Ship News Association of this city

"It is only fitting that this servic should be recognized, and I gladly do s by appointing three of the members of th association on the committee that wi officially meet and greet Capt. Georg Fried and his crew on the arrival of th President Roosevelt, Feb. 15."

Heavy storms at sea during the pa few weeks have kept the ship news me working night and day.

J. M. McClelland—Watched his town start from scratch

THREE years ago, R. A. Long, chairman of the board of directors of the Long-Bell Lumber Company, talking to J. M. McClelland, a newspaper man, said in effect:

"In my mind is the dream of a model city in the lumber region of Washington to be called Longview; and, as the first step towards making that dream come true, I want to start a daily newspaper."

"Really," replied Mr. McClelland sincerely, "that just isn't done. It is absolutely without precedent. I can't conceive of a daily newspaper in a city with no population. It's fantastic."

But it was done. Mr. McClelland is now publisher of the Longview Daily News, an independent newspaper, of more than 4,000 circulation, published by its own corporation, and not controlled by any outside interest.

The Daily News, an Associated Press member, began publishing in April 1923, from a tiny wind-swept shack set in an open field with no other building in sight, and it has led the way in the over-night growth of Longview. Mr. McClelland, as publisher, sat then on a keg for a chair, a kitchen table for his desk and looked over his plant at one glance, a drum cylinder press and a single lonely linotype machine. His staff numbered three men. By July of the same year, he had moved the paper into a model plant, 50 by 120 feet, thoroughly equipped with modern newspaper machinery. Today the once vacant land around him is laid out in streets and houses 12,000 people call their homes. It takes 34 people to run the Daily News now, and 40 carrier boys to lay the editions on the ever increasing Longview doorsteps.

"Longview is a community built by advertising and a daily newspaper," Mr. McClelland said this week in an interview.

"In 1923 the first community advertising campaign was launched by the Longview Company with an appropriation of $100,000. The story of a dream city was told in newspaper and magazine advertisements published throughout the country. In 1925, $125,000 was invested in advertising. A similar sum was spent last year. As a result, a city grew up for our paper to serve.

"And in watching it grow before my eyes, I learned it was the truth that the start of a daily newspaper is necessarily the first step in the beginning of a town to be built by advertising.

"People literally poured into Longview answering the advertisements. Within six months, we had a circulation of 2,500. The merchants were all new; their customers were new. Their only method of contact was through a daily paper.

"And a most important function it was our duty to perform was the development of civic consciousness. Our cornerstone policy was the promotion of a high type of happy American citizenship.

"In accomplishing this, we made it our aim to promote all practical activities that would contribute to social happiness. We believed in bringing the people together through indoor and outdoor sports, entertainment, and civic work.

"We taught our people to vote. In all municipal elections the poll is extraordinarily large.

"Longview is basically an industrial city. We endeavored to combine the material with aesthetic interests. The Daily News wanted to promote pride in property. We offered prizes for the best flower gardens. We wanted more birds, and inaugurated a contest among the boys, offering prizes for the best bird houses they could build.

"We made our sporting page as full of local interest as we could. As young a town as Longview is, it has its own baseball team, an intra-city bowling league, a twilight baseball league, and a league soccer team.

"We have considered our society and women's page our chief aid in circulation building. Before we were 18 months old, we conducted a cooking school. At least twice a week we try to run pictures of local interest. We spend about $500 a year on local cuts."

But not half the part played by the Daily News and its publisher in the building of its city has appeared in type between its column rules. In addition to the organization of a newspaper, the organization of the city itself became the task of Mr. McClelland. His office was the mecca of all questioners. To him fell the work of organizing the Longview school, first financed by the Longview Company and later taken over by the state. He had to start the local Y.M.C.A., before the national authorities agreed to take charge.

Mr. McClelland has many "firsts" to his credit, naturally. He was first chairman of the library board, served on the first city council, ate the first meal served up in Longview, and attended the town's first wedding.

Of course, the Daily News lost money at first. Longview did not spring up with enough gold in its hand to pay the full price immediately for newspaper service. And the paper has always kept a step or two ahead of its public. But Mr. McClelland claimed the losses continued only for the first five months. At the end of the sixth month the Daily News cleared $1300 and has been showing a profit each month since, he said. Starting with an investment of $49,000, it has been estimated that an intangible good-will asset of $100,000 has been created during the three years of operation.

"The city which has grown up is the sort you like to sit in a corner and dream about," Mr. McClelland declared. "Before a shovel full of dirt was turned architects were sent to many cities in the United States and even Europe to study city planning. All underground work was finished before a house was started, with enough gas, electric, and sewer mains laid for a city of 50,000.

"One feature of the city which might be copied and promoted by a newspaper elsewhere is the manner in which the Longview hospital is financed. By payment of $15 a year, any citizen passing an examination, obtains all needed medical and dental attention from the hospital's staff. It is the cheapest form of insurance, and easily pays the hospital's way. The $15 entitles the person paying it to a room in the hospital, if that is necessary, to treatment by any hospital doctor desired, and the cost of any major or minor operation ordered.

"The Daily News pays the $15 a year for each member of its staff."

Mr. McClelland is an easterner by birth. He grew up on the Washington (Pa.) Observer and Reporter, owned by John L. Stewart, president of the Pennsylvania Newspaper Publishers Association.

Advertisers and Agents Increase the Cost of Space Without Proportionate Increase in Value

Advertisers and their agents continue to encourage keen competition among newspapers and all other publications for circulation. The prize—the advertising contract—is given to that publication that has the greatest distribution.

Necessarily there is a keen desire on the part of publishers to be in a position to secure a maximum amount of national advertising. Therefore, they go the limit to secure the largest possible distribution.

Much of this forced distribution is waste. It is transitory circulation secured by various devices; much of it is out of the publisher's natural trading territory.

As long as circulation is the desideratum of the advertiser, the publisher is going to furnish it.

When advertisers analyze circulation and buy on merit, when bulk alone is not the consideration,—then publishers will cease in their competition for worthless distribution and advertisers will secure a greater percentage of worthwhile circulation.

After all, what an advertiser buys in a newspaper is the right to appeal to an audience. He should insure results in so far as he can by being certain of the character of that audience. His message he must furnish himself. The publisher delivers that message. If his readers are unreceptive, if they have bought the paper because of a premium offered and not for the intrinsic value of the publication itself, they are not likely to respond to the advertiser's appeal.

The publication that is bought because the reader wants it, necessarily has the greatest attention-value. A message in such a medium makes a strong appeal to its audience. If advertisers are buying the attention of an audience and the publisher is delivering the attention of only part of that audience, then the advertiser is wasting at least a part of his advertising appropriation.

This waste will continue just as long as the advertising contract is the prize hung up to that publisher who secures, by any possible means, the largest volume of distribution. Such inflated circulation will cease to be sold just as soon as the advertiser ceases to buy it. It adds to the cost of newspaper production, it adds to the cost of advertising space, and neither the inflated circulation nor the advertising such copies carry is of value to either publisher or advertiser.

Why not stop it?

STRONGER PRESS LEADERSHIP STRESSED AT N. Y. STATE EDITORS MEETING

Concerted Action by All State Newspaper Groups Urged at Convention of Weeklies in Syracuse—Conrath Named President

THE American press has grown lax estimating values that present a true interpretation of American life and it should immediately begin to take stock of its tremendous power for leadership by concerted action on the part of the members of state press association.

This statement embodies the sentiment of two principal speakers who addressed the banquet of about 100 members of the New York State Press Association at their 74th annual meeting in the Onondaga Hotel, Syracuse, Feb. 5 and 6. The speakers were Dr. Edward Amherst Ott, author and lecturer, of Ithaca, N. Y., and Rev. Dr. Frederick W. Betts, pastor of the First Universalist Church, Syracuse. The latter maintained that the newspaper of today is a fact finding institution; that the reporter must be dependable if modern democracy is to be successful; that the newspapers of the past were too much organs of opinion, and that this sort of "guessing today about such things as the reasons for the resignation of the Prince of Roumania is nothing more than back door gossip and unfair."

"The future of democracy depends upon sound public opinion," said Dr. Betts. "There is greater safety with newspapers and no government than a government without newspapers. Mussolini is trying to found a government without public opinion and newspapers. That is where he fails."

Elmer E. Conrath, editor of the Cuba Patriot and Free Press, was elected president of the association for the coming year. Mr. Conrath has been active in opposing the printing of envelopes by the government He succeeds John W. Baker of the Ithaca Journal-News. Other officers elected are: Vice-president, Fay C. Parsons, Cortland Democrat; secretary, Jay W. Shaw, Elmira; treasurer, Elias Vair, Waterloo News. Members of the executive committee: Peter A. Blossom, Brockport Republic; Thomas H. Alvord, Livonia Gazette; and Merritt M. Landon, Bath Advocate.

Prior to the official opening of the convention, Thursday evening, members listened to a discussion of "Special Representation in the National Advertising Field, led by Emmet Finley, general manager, American Press Association. Following discussions at this meeting resolutions were passed approving "the policy of an advisory council consisting of three members of the association to act in conjunction with the American Press Association for the purpose of promoting foreign advertising and developing cooperation between the publishers and the association as a representative of weekly newspapers." The field secretary and two members of the press association appointed by the executive committee will serve on the committee.

It was further resolved that all members, for the purpose of maintaining their rates, "refuse to direct advertisers both the customary agency commission and the customary representative's commission." Another clause urges "all members to refuse the representatives' commission to advertisers placing copy through agencies." The last clause relates specifically that attention be called "to the effort recently made by General Motors and Hudson-Essex to obtain for themselves the representative's commission. We urge that no member shall accept this or any advertising offered on a similar basis except on the basis of his full gross rate less only the customary agency commission when the advertising is placed through a recognized agency."

At the opening session, Friday, J. W. Shaw, field secretary, made a complete report of the activities of his office for the past year. It was followed by unanimous support of a budget of $8,500 to carry on the work for this year.

Following the report of the treasurer, Elias Vair, of the Waterloo News, and address, "Your Association As I See It" was given by Professor John O. Simmons of the Department of Journalism at Syracuse University. James O'Shaughnessy, executive secretary of the American Association of Advertising Agencies, scheduled to speak, was unable to attend.

Wives of editors were entertained at noon luncheon by the Department of Journalism at Syracuse University, women students of journalism escorted the ladies to the University where they were addressed after lunch by Dr. Paul M. Paine, public librarian and former newspaper man. A musical and tea at the Faculty Club followed a tour of the campus. The men attending the convention were guests of the Syracuse Rotary Club at luncheon.

The afternoon session started with discussion of "Your State Press Association and Envelope Legislation," by Elmer E. Conrath. A full-discussion of the subject followed with the passage of a resolution that the association, representing the weekly newspapers of the State, unanimously favors the bill now before the House Post Office Committee which would "stop the present practice of the Post Office Department in competing unfairly with private industry by printing special return cards on government stamped envelopes at a price manifestly below actual cost of doing such work in the best equipped printing plants of the country."

The bill was declared "an unjust and unwarranted invasion of private industry by the Post Office Department. Regardless of its effect on the printing industry, it is tending toward socialistic practices that are foreign to our government. We submit that there is not a single individual joining in the request but would rise in righteous wrath were the government to enter into such competition in his own line of business and cut prices below cost. He would call upon the press to demand that the injustices be corrected and the press would gladly respond as it always does when wrongs are to be righted. We therefore ask our representatives in both houses of Congress to stamp out this socialistic practice with disapproval by enacting the bill to abolish this invasion of the printing industry."

A copy of the resolution was forwarded to each Senator and Representative from New York State.

C. E. Lovejoy, editor of the Bronxville Press and Tuckahoe Citizen Bulletin, discussed the "Value of the County Press Associations" in place of Tom Kennett, president of the Westchester County Weeklies Associated, and publisher of the Pelham Sun.

Chancellor Charles W. Flint of Syracuse University gave the address of welcome at the annual banquet Friday evening, referring to the days when he used to set type on a weekly newspaper. President Baker presided. The ladies joined in the banquet which was attended by about 100.

The first part of the Saturday morning session was given over to "group breakfasts," the members assembling at tables for semi-weeklies, county seat weeklies, and suburban weeklies.

The subject of "Appraisal and Insurance" was opened by Thomas Alvord of the Livonia Gazette, followed by discussion of "State Legislation."

Tribute was paid to the late William J. Allen of the Adams Jefferson County Journal, who died Jan. 26 at the age of 80 years. He had been a member for 52 years. Others who are still members with as long service as Mr. Allen are W. E. Bacheller of Middletown, and A. C. Kessinger of the Rome Sentinel.

Mrs. A. O. Bunnell, widow of the late A. O. Bunnell, who for many years was secretary of the New York State Press Association, sent a communication to the association relative to the complete set of letters and material which had been saved all during the time of the earliest years of the association. Among the letters were those written in acceptance of engagements to speak at meetings of the Press Association during its earliest years, including Henry Ward Beecher, James Russel Lowell, and many others. The association voted to have the executive committee acquire the letters and to have them kept for exhibition purposes at the State Library in Albany or in some place where they could be referred to conveniently.

A resolution was adopted relative to the clean books bill and sent to Albany to the effect that the present laws if enforced would be sufficient to cover the desired legislation.

MERGER IN FULLERTON, CAL.

Daily Tribune Buys and Consolidates Semi-Weekly News

The Fullerton (Cal.) Daily Tribune has purchased the Fullerton News, semi-weekly, taking over the subscription list, advertising contracts, name, etc., and on Feb. 5, consolidated the News with the Tribune, operating under the name of the Daily Tribune-News. The News Publishing Company retains the printing plant which, it is understood is to be sold outside of Fullerton.

The News was established 25 years ago as a weekly publication and changed to an evening daily paper about 5 years ago.

A year ago the Evening News was discontinued as a daily paper and since that date it has been published as a semi-weekly.

The Tribune was established as a weekly 35 years ago by the present owner and editor, E. Johnson, who changed the publication to an evening daily paper about 16 years ago.

AGENCY MAN VIEWS RETAIL AD PROBLEMS

Thomas Ryan, Pedlar & Ryan, Attacks System of Advertising Percentages—Advises Simplicity in Copy—Direct Mail Held Only Supplemental to Newspapers

FOUR outstanding deficiencies in department store advertising were listed this week by Thomas Ryan, of Pedlar & Ryan, Inc., New York advertising agency, addressing the annual convention of the National Retail Dry Goods Association, Pennsylvania Hotel, New York, Feb. 10. They were, he said:

1. Lack of the long-range view.
2. The pernicious system of advertising percentages.
3. The willingness to spend large sums on space, and the tendency to spend very little indeed on copy and art.
4. Lack of advanced preparation for closing dates.

Other speakers who discussed advertising topics this week included P. K. Crocker, advertising manager, John Schoonmaker & Son, Inc., Newburgh, who declared direct mail was advantageous when used in co-ordination with newspaper advertising; T. A. Weston, Kaufman's Big Store, Pittsburgh, on selecting merchandise for advertising; Ernest C. Hastings, the Caldwell Store, Inc., Washington, Pa., on co-ordinating advertising and merchandising; and W. T. White, Rike-Kumler Company, Dayton, on planning a store-wide event.

"Strict application of the advertising percentage system is the lazy man's attitude", Mr. Ryan contended. "Percentages to be spent on advertising cannot be arbitrarily fixed."

He advocated that percentages be increased to 11 per cent or even as high as 20 per cent as business expanded.

"The newspapers are believed", he continued, "department store advertising managers must win belief by able handling of their copy."

Mr. Ryan scored the use of Michael Arlen English in department store advertising copy, quoting from Rabelais that "It becomes us to speak the common language." He advocated the cultivation of simplicity.

"Direct mail in our store is in co-ordination with our newspaper advertising," Mr. Crocker said. "Which is paramount in importance is, with us, a debatable question. While we should be loath to minimize the advantages proved from a well-calculated use of newspaper space, our experience with our direct mail medium would forbid us to forswear this latter form of publicity in any event. We have tested both, tested them, we believe, thoroughtly. We have the analyses, a definite understanding of their relative performances.

"Probably cost of production would be a matter of interest. I regret that I am not at liberty to give intimate details of our expenditures. Printing costs vary with localities. I can say, however, that expenses of publishing, handling and postage aggregate a space cost which, line for line, or inch for inch, per 1,000 circulation is favorably comparable with display rates in our leading local daily.

"In co-ordination with our Store News publicity, we are liberal users of space in daily papers in Newburgh and at least two other cities. We also advertise regularly in eighteen or twenty weekly papers and several periodicals of merit published within our territory."

"Selecting the merchandise for advertising is unquestionably one of the most important single functions in the selling division of the department store," Mr. Weston asserted.

"There are two major things to be sold," he said, "the first is the store, and the second is the merchandise. Everyone will agree to this, but not everyone will practice it. The country still has too many stores in which the men who are selecting the merchandise for advertising are seeing only the smaller part. They will not raise their heads to see the larger vision. They call themselves practical minded. They are stubborn and they will not let go of the one thing they know.

"Selecting merchandise for advertising requires first of all a broad knowledge of the merchandise now in the store and on the way. And of course the more exact the knowledge, the more complete the job.

"In stores which have grown out of the habit of thinking only in terms of price, volume and crowds, there is another trio of standards by which merchandise is selected for advertising. These three are service, news and prestige. The term service here has a double meaning; one, the service of quality, usefulness, long wear—the reputation which follows standardized specifications of manufacture and fair pricing in to give full measure of value.

"The other meaning of service is timeliness. Service in merchandise to the customer because it is featured or suggested at the exact moment when it will give the purchaser the utmost satisfaction and usefulness.

"This element of timeliness is vital. It is the motor which moves, we would say, perhaps ninety per cent of all advertised merchandise. Mediocre timing will move a small quantity, given other favorable elements to help, but the right timing is following the channel of least resistance. It lights a spark in the eye of every reader, and it keeps the stream of merchandise flowing at top speed.

"The news element in the selection of merchandise is important because it has that vital quality of timeliness.

"The news feature of the moment that is making the front pages of the newspapers in your city can occasionally be deflected to your advantage. But the idea must be used adroitly. It is no tool for clumsy hands. Better be let alone than bungled. There is plenty of news value in the merchandise itself if we look for it. It begins to appear when we stop looking at merchandise as so much measure of fabric and weight of material.

"Now we come to the subject of prestige value in selecting merchandise for advertising.

"We, at Kaufman's, are persistently giving a steadily larger proportion of our total space to prestige advertising. I do not mean windy self praise, but planned and continuous promotion in an outstanding way of standard merchandise by single items, by complete lines, by departments, by divisional groups. Also a steady, planned program of attention-getting affairs, so rotated that every part of the store and its activities and services will be brought to the public's attention during the year.

"There is hardly a day on which we do not use from 10 to 35 per cent of our linage for future growth. We look upon it as insurance, believing that it would be foolhardy to entrust all our future development and present accumulated momentum to the single feature of daily special prices.

"We do not expect immediate returns from all such advertising. We would be surprised if it came. But we try by a constant shift of interest and change of pace to attract them and hold attention as being not just another store, but a service institution which can be looked to, to supply fresh interest in the daily life of the community.

"We try, naturally, to be practical in the sense of featuring merchandise which is timely, which has news value, which has the quality of use and service. But we want to help people to realize that our store is there every day, that there are always to be found complete stocks of quality merchandise, chosen with care and skill. That new things can be found on our counters as rapidly as fashion devises them and good taste approves them.

"We believe such prestige has cash value, that it has morale value in our own store, that engenders a worthy pride in ourselves, and the public's pride in us, that each such instance serves to make one more tie which will bind to us a few more desirable customers.

"We believe that bargain advertising, special prices, manufacturers' close-outs are not the whole story. That there is something finer, richer, more lasting and we try in selecting the merchandise for advertising, to think of these things."

Mr. Hastings declared that 99 merchants out of every 100 today are dissatisfied with their advertising.

"But the reason they are dissatisfied is within their power of correction," he added.

"Up to the present time they insist upon the advertising man dealing in facts only, with the result that the average department store advertisement of today has

"MENTAL DISCIPLINE" IMPORTANT AIM OF ILLINOIS JOURNALISM COURSE

Students Taught to Test Various Materials for Reliability, Interest, and Importance—Considerable Outside Reading and Theoretical Instruction

By LAWRENCE W. MURPHY

(This is seventh of a series of articles designed to interpret work of journalism schools to editors of the nation.)

THE newspaper man cannot know everything, but he can have a disciplined attitude toward everything. That's the idea on which the professional course in journalism at the University of Illinois is based. A disciplined attitude, as referred to here, means much more than a mind disciplined to shape news materials into story form; it means a mind disciplined to test for reliability, interest, and importance, materials of every sort from every source.

The professional course gives the student practice in gathering, writing, and editing news, a knowledge of the history and ethics of journalism, and offers him an opportunity to study the work of special departments and fields such as advertising, feature writing, newspaper administration, weekly and daily journalism; it requires him to study the fundamentals of at least two natural sciences, a foreign language, history, political science, economics, sociology, psychology or philosophy, and prescribes at least one advanced course in literature; it offers him a wide range of elective studies from which to choose subjects to supplement the requirements, but it does not consider that these things alone are all-sufficient for the success of the journalism graduate. It insists on the journalistic discipline as fundamental.

The disciplinary feature is acquired as a sideline in some courses and as the central requirement in others. It assumes a definite form in the courses in copyreading and editorial writing, although it is given emphasis in all.

In the course in copyreading the ordinary technical detail has been relegated to the laboratory and the class work now centers about the study and application of principles involved in news' values.

Thus it happens that a stranger, visiting the class in copyreading might wonder what it was all about. The class devotes no time at all to writing headlines, reading copy, learning technical names, reading proof, or diagraming front pages. It spends its time on such matters as the application of the laws of human and acquired interest to news stories, analysis of so-called public opinion, study of all known methods of determining importance of information, application of measurements of importance to journalism, application of laws of evidence, rules of logic, social welfare, scientific method, etc., to news stories, determination of tests of personal reliability, documentary reliability, official record reliability, value of ideas as news, determination of propaganda.

The study of these matters is theoretical to a degree but it leaves the student with an attitude toward the practice of journalism which cannot be achieved in any other way at the present time. The method of teaching is that employed in regular classwork and includes assignment of 100 pages or more of outside reading each week in such fields as psychology, statistics, philosophy, education, and historiography. Students report on their outside reading in addition to the text study and with the help of practical exercises formulate the rules which they later apply to determine news values.

The laboratory work of the course consists of two two-hour periods under a member of the journalism faculty. One of these is a regular meeting of the class in small sections to do set exercises in copyreading, headwriting, makeup, and proofreading, the other is a two hour shift on the Daily Illini, an Associated Press daily, during which each student takes the run of the work as he would on a regular desk job. In this way the laboratory work is made to cover all the work and all the subjects with which the desk man deals and also gives the student the practice of doing the work of a regular staff member on a daily newspaper.

The disciplinary study does not belong to the copyreading course alone. It is given attention throughout the professional classes, but the emphasis follows a graduated scale becoming more exacting and all-inclusive as the student advances. In the reporting course it receives a relatively small amount of attention; in copyreading, which follows reporting, the bulk of the emphasis; and in the course in editorial writing and the course in ethics of journalism discussion with reference to particular difficulties. The editorial writer for example, has one more source to test than the reporter as a rule, and that is the news story or report which provokes the editorial.

The care taken in the copyreading course to give attention to both the advanced study and the practice of journalism is followed in the other courses as well. The journalism graduate, in addition to formal class and laboratory study, has done regular reporting of city news, regular desk work, regular editorial writing, before he leaves the university. He has done these things in a small way, of course, but to a sufficient extent to give him a working knowledge of the profession. This working knowledge is of immediate practical help to him in getting and holding his first position, but the disciplined attitude toward news, and the background materials of a college education soon begin to function as a part of his equipment, and it is this discipline and background which are of the most value to the graduate as time passes.

Of twenty-three journalism graduates of last year twenty are now engaged in some form of publication work. A review of the distribution might help answer the question "What becomes of the journalism students?" At the present time, six months after graduation, the class is distributed as follows: editors of weekly papers, 3; reporters on metropolitan papers, 2; reporter for City Press Bureau, 1; city editor of small daily, 1; reporters on small dailies, 2; editorial staff of general magazines, 2; assistant editors of class magazines, 2; advertising investigator, 1; publicity, 3; assistant editor of experiment bulletins, 1; high school teacher of journalistic writing and publication adviser, 1; Associated Press correspondent, 1. The three not in publication work are engaged as follows: graduate student in English, 1; business, 1; married, 1.

There are more spectacular things about our work. The isolation of and emphasis on the mental discipline centering around news values is new and marks a step toward placing instruction in journalism on a truly professional plane.

Just to hint at the spectacular we have a two semester course in newswriting dealing exclusively with sport news and (86 enrolled) offered for sport coaches and sport writers. We have a $75,000 plant built up from the profit on the student publication; we have the only morning newspaper in a community of 35,000 printed in this plant and running throughout the year, six days a week, as an eight and twelve page paper—eight columns to the page; this paper is the first college paper in the United States—or elsewhere to be granted membership in the Associated Press and has caried full service for several years. Last year students in the course in reporting covered all precincts in the county on the presidential election and Champaign county turned in its reports in accurate form well in advance of other counties. This year we have 232 regular students in the professional course with transfer students from 35 colleges and universities.

These things savor of the sideshow rather than the main tent, however, and I feel that you will see that we are trying to get at the heart of the problem in our work. As regards our instructors the course in reporting is taught by Charles B. Davis; the course in copyreading by Charles L. Allen and Laurence F. Triggs; the course in editorial writing by myself.

Results!
For Your Advertisers

SATISFACTORY advertisements are those that bring results for your advertisers. Display faces of distinctive design—new and fresh—make your advertisements more attractive—more readable.

There is only one system that can bring you these distinctive faces in a range from six to sixty point, bold and extended included, cast in slug-lines. That system is the Ludlow.

The Ludlow advantages of speed and economy are important but it is the ability of this system to produce bright, display lines that has led to its almost universal adoption by America's foremost newspapers.

FOLKS WORTH KNOWING

E. P. CLARKE, editor of the Riverside (Cal.) Press and president of the California State Board of Education, has completed 40 years of service in Southern California journalism. His first venture was the Ontario (Cal.) Record, which he established with his brother, A. F. Clarke, in 1885. After nine years in Ontario, Mr. Clarke went to Riverside where he acquired an interest in the Press, which had been established in 1886.

E. P. CLARKE

Recalling his experiences in an editorial recently published in the Press, Mr. Clarke says that he believes that he can do as heavy a day's work now as he could 40 years ago. He directs the policies of the Press, writes the leading editorials and even when away from home on business connected with the state school system, sends back editorial matter on political and educational affairs.

Mr. Clarke, in spite of his many civic interests, has been an active newspaper man every day for the 40 years, "Sundays included," as he confesses in his autobiographical editorial.

Samuel H. Caufman, Jr., of the local staff, Wilmington (Del.) Every Evening, and Mrs. Caufman, are parents of a son.

CLARENCE S. LUNT of the brokerage firm of C. S. Lunt & Co., Rochester, died in his home in that city after a long illness. He formerly was managing editor of the Bangor (Me.) Commercial and was associated with the Rochester Post-Express before founding the brokerage house bearing his name.

JAMES H. GALLAGHER, 61, operator of the first color press in Boston and foreman of the Boston (Mass.) Globe color pressroom died last week.

CHARLES KEITEL, oldest employe of the Goss Printing Press Company, who had served the company for 37 years continuously, was killed recently in an automobile accident in Chicago. Mr. Keitel was one of the best known erectors of newspaper printing presses and had built several hundred machines throughout the United States, Central and South America and in England.

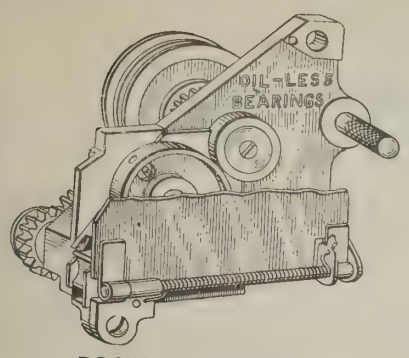
MRS. EDWIN B. STEARNS, founder and former editor of the East Oakland (Cal.) Weekly Progress, was killed Jan. 22, in an automobile accident.

ST. PAUL KNEW THE VALUE OF PUBLICITY

"No minister who claims that advertising cheapens the message of the church will ever quote one word from St. Paul, if he is consistent. Paul glorified that profession forever, no matter how men have debased it since. He said 'Go ye into the bypaths and compel men to come.' Advertising is a modern bypath."

So reads the introduction to the new Publicity Manual of the Universalist denomination.

The value of church advertising is being comprehended by church leaders everywhere and the newspaper that's awake will recognize a great opportunity in that fact.



We will furnish ideas for building a church page, and provide copy for a cooperative campaign through which your newspaper can reach the spiritual bypaths. Address your request to the

What Is Intertype Non-Obsolescence?

"What do you mean by 'Intertype Non-Obsolescence'?" asked a prospective buyer. . . . Here is the answer:

Suppose you had a CAR ten years old —and the maker's salesman came to you and said:

"That car is standardized and non-obsolescent.

"You can put on balloon tires.

"You can put on four-wheel brakes.

"You can put on ALL the improvements developed during the past ten years.

"You can make your ten-year-old car as up-to-date as the finest machine that leaves our factory today!"

You'd say: "That's a pretty good car to own" —wouldn't you? Then note this:

ALL Intertype units and improvements developed during the past ten years can be applied to ANY outstanding Standardized Intertype.

This is an exclusive Intertype feature.

A few of these improvements are shown at the left. Don't you think the Standardized, Unit-Built, Interchangeable, Non-Obsolescent Intertype is a good machine to own?

No Standardized Intertype Has Ever Become Obsolete!

BELL WILL CO-OPERATE WITH UNITED FEATURE

Two Syndicates Will Centralize on Promotion and Sales—Joining in Production of New Features—New Picture Service Announced

An agreement has been reached between the Bell Syndicate and the United Feature Syndicate, both New York corporations, under which the two organizations will carry on their respective activities on a co-operative basis, it was announced this week. Each syndicate will maintain its own office as heretofore and its present editorial organization and will operate independently in its own field, but the two will centralize on promotion and sales and will co-operate in the production of new features.

There has been no merger between the two organizations and neither has acquired a financial or proprietary interest in the other. It is simply a co-operative arrangement for production and for simplifying the selling of features here and abroad.

John N. Wheeler, president of Bell Syndicate, announced he believed that this agreement is "a step toward putting the syndicate business on the right track."

"I believe it will work," he said. "Efforts to develop high grade features should become more effective as a result of this arrangement. Duplication will be avoided. It will be wholly natural that each syndicate will specialize in its own established field and in many cases co-operation will be an advantage both to newspapers and to the two syndicates. In other words it is anticipated that, working in close touch with the United Press Associations and its organization throughout the world, the United Feature Syndicate will confine itself largely to news features, news pictures and the work of the world's great writers while the Bell Syndicate will continue to develop its list of art and literary features.

"In addition to offering the features of both syndicates singly and in groups as heretofore, we shall offer an exclusive franchise covering all features of both syndicates and a pony franchise made up of selected features designed for newspapers who prefer a service at a lower cost."

"The agreement between these organizations," says Howard Wheeler, vice president of the United Feature Syndicate, "has come about through recognition of the growing and seemingly justified irritation of newspaper editors and publishers over the rapidly increasing number of independent syndicate enterprises, with the resulting duplication and re-duplication of features good and bad, and the steadily increasing army of syndicate salesmen, good and not so good, each one of whom makes his demand on the harassed editor's time.

"All we are doing is attempting to find a sound and workable arrangement between two syndicate organizations that gives promise of covering the field of newspaper features adequately with the best material in the various types of features that can be found here or abroad, and to supply them to newspapers without duplication and with the least possible expenditure of time by the editor, the publisher and ourselves. Our recent association with the Conde Nast Newspaper Service was an initial step in this direction."

The inauguration of a news-picture and news-feature service by the United Feature Syndicate was announced.

Mergenthaler Calls Stockholders Meet

Directors of the Mergenthaler Linotype Company have called a special stockholders meeting for March 16, to approve a change in the capital stock from shares of $100 par value to shares without par value and to increase the number from 150,000 to 300,000. The directors intend to authorize the shares of the new stock for each $100 par value now held.

PRESS FOUNDATION ADDS MEMBERS

Frank P. Glass Chief Speaker at Closing Season in St. Petersburg—State Delegates Present Gift to Mr. and Mrs. Haines

The closing session of International Press Foundation meeting was held in the Rolyat Hotel, St. Petersburg, Fla., Feb. 5, with Frank P. Glass former editor of the St. Louis Star as chief speaker.

Mr. Glass emphasized the work EDITOR & PUBLISHER is doing for the newspaper fraternity and said it would be a great factor in helping make the International Press Foundation truly international in scope.

Delegates attending the meeting represented 47 state press asociations, and the Press Congress of the World. They had spent a week in Florida inspecting the 1,000 acre site donated to the Press Foundation by Mr. and Mrs. Charles D. Haines and in forming an organization to put Mr. Haines' plan in operation.

"The work of the Foundation must be done now," Mr. Glass said, "and the momentum to the movement must be kept up."

Maj. Lew B. Brown, publisher of the St. Petersburg Independent was chairman of the organization meeting. James C. Latimer, field secretary of the Press Congress of the World was called upon to present the plans of that group for the convention to be held in Geneva, Switzerland, Sept. 14-28.

The membership committee of the Press Foundation reported the following additional members:

Dr. Walter Williams, president, James W. Brown, secretary-treasurer, and James C. Latimer, field secretary of the Press Congress of the World; Wil V. Tufford, secretary, Inland Daily Press Association; Frank O. Edgecombe, publisher, Geneva (Neb.) Signal and president, National Editorial Association, and Maj. A. E. Barnett, of Sarasota, a local publisher and assistant temporary secretary of the Foundation. All were unanimously elected members.

The following committees functioned during the convention:

Nominations:—Thomas W. Lusk, New Mexico, chairman; G. E. Campbell, Massachusetts; Wm. J. Smith, Illinois; William Holmes, Utah, and Charles Roundtree, Georgia.

Constitution and by-laws: Fred L. Wolf, Washington, chairman; F. A. Robertson, New Jersey; A. Van Koevering, Michigan; T. V. Crowley, Tennessee and J. N. Green, Colorado.

Resolutions: W. M. Green, Colorado, chairman: Herbert C. Willis, Indiana; Wallace Odell, New York, and Edward Harrington, Arizona.

The committee on constitution and by-laws reported the charter as the constitution, which was adopted. The by-laws were then read and adopted. Copies of the by-laws will be mailed to publishers throughout the United States.

Previous to and following the business session held in Orlando the editors, many of whom were accompanied by their wives, were taken on sight-seeing tours of the state on special trains and in motor cars.

At St. Petersburg Colonel and Mrs. Haines were presented with a silver electric coffee urn with 48 silver cups, on each of which was inscribed the name of the state represented in the organization of the Foundation.

Dear Mr. Johnson:

You are sending us a great service, and we are delighted with it. It is particularly well balanced, and your comic page seems to us a great winner.

We are putting on new circulation at the rate of more than 150 a day, and we believe that a great part of this increase is due to the influence of the features furnished us by you.

You have added during the month two or three small features which have been of great help.

NEWSPAPER INSTITUTE OF AMERICA
NEW YORK

An announcement . . .

Gentlemen of the Press:

The founders of this organization, just formed, feel a deep obligation and responsibility to the American Press. To acquaint you with our objects, aims and aspirations, we come before you through the medium of this esteemed publication of the trade.

We have organized for the purpose of making available, to interested and qualified men and women, practical, intelligent, adequate training in newspaper work—news gathering, news writing, the ethics and traditions of the press.

The instruction we offer is based on "The Copy Desk Method." This is the first time copy desk methods have been applied literally to training in newspaper writing. Our Course has been written to parallel the actual working conditions of newspaper editorial rooms. Institute students will be given typical assignments to cover. These assignments will be examined by expert copy readers in the Institute's editorial room, criticized, corrected and returned for the students' future guidance.

Newspaper work as it is conducted in New York City editorial rooms is the model around which our Course has been written. The texts and lectures were written by New York newspaper men. "The Copy Desk Method" faithfully reproduces the conditions under which New York staff writers work.

The home-study method, which brings this invaluable training within the reach of every worthy, ambitious person, will be employed.

Allied with us, as contributing lecturers, is a group of successful newspaper men now actively engaged in newspaper work, most of them in New York. Men in other centers will contribute viewpoints that do not arise in metropolitan fields.

It is well-known that not every person is naturally adapted to a newspaper career. To enable each to determine his fitness in advance of taking our Course, we have prepared a Questionnaire, which every applicant for training is asked to use. The Questionnaire contains a combined aptitude and literacy test. Applicants who fail to make a creditable showing on the test are urged to seek some vocation for which they are better fitted.

Instruction in newspaper writing as actually practised in editorial rooms has not heretofore been available for home study.

Every Editor can tell a story of how, with the limited time available, he has tried to teach untrained, but eager and ambitious young men and women the rudiments of the newspaper profession as it is practised—of how some of the most desirable talent has been dismissed because of inability to "catch on" and maintain the pace that prevails in every busy newspaper office. Therefore, we believe we have an opportunity to be of genuine service to newspaper editors as well as to prospective newspaper men and women.

We have no theories about "reforming" the press. Practical newspaper men ourselves, we are interested primarily in disseminating the facts about news gathering and writing as actually accomplished.

"We shall consider the newspaper just as it is," runs the introduction to the Reporter's Handbook of the Institute's Course. "What it ought to be is not the concern of the beginner who prepares to enter newspaper work. He may take it or leave it: if he takes it, he must take it as he finds it."

We are concerned with the modern newspaper as it is, not as some people think it ought to be.

We feel that our success in large degree depends upon the moral support and co-operation of the editors of the country. We are making a sincere effort to be of service. We want every editor in the country to know all about our Course.

Naturally it is not our thought to seek to sell you our course of instruction; we simply desire to acquaint you with it, so that you may form your own opinion of its value.

We want every editor to have a copy of our book—"Newspaper Writing—Its Opportunities and Rewards," and our Questionnaire, which reveal our plans and purposes fully. You are cordially invited to use the coupon below to obtain a complimentary Press Copy of the book, and one of the Questionnaires.

WHAT'S WHAT IN THE FEATURE FIELD

World Leaders Contributing to Newspaper Symposium—National News Service Opens Pittsburgh Office—New Features for Sporting Pages

"OUR WORLD—By the Men who are helping to Shape It" is the title of a series of articles by different world leaders which began publication Feb. 8, in the New York Times and other American newspapers, distributed by the New York Times News Service.

The symposium was obtained by the London Morning Post. The first of the articles was by ex-President Poincare. Articles by Benito Mussolini, General Primo de Rivera, Eduard Benes, M. Vandervelde, Herr Stresemann. General Ladonier of Esthonia, M. Skrzynski of Poland, Premier Baron Matsui of Japan, James M. Beck of the United States and others follow.

In an editorial commenting on the series, the Morning Post said:

"The press is becoming more and more utilized as a vehicle of communication between the governors and the governed. And further, the press is becoming more and more internationalized, inasmuch as news of all other countries is published in newspapers of each country. It is not England and the Continent alone which will learn from our pages the views of the Premiers of Europe. The nations of the Continent and the American public will also be informed. In this wide and instant dissemination of opinion exists one powerful means of preventing that misunderstanding which is so prolific a cause of jealousy and suspicion, leading to war. Each of the leaders of men who will contribute to these columns has his own peculiar difficulties, which are complicated by the difficulties of his neighbors, for it is no longer possible that any European State, nor even the United States of America, should conduct its affairs in isolation. Hence it is that each may learn from the other."

The National News Service, Philadelphia, this week opened a new office in Pittsburgh, Pa., occupying the second floor of 335 Fifth avenue. Albert Isaacs is in charge as district manager. The office will cover Western Pennsylvania and Ohio.

The same organization announces the appointment of Ralph Peterson, of Atlantic City, as field man. Al Silberman has been transferred from Philadelphia headquarters to the New York offices as New York district manager.

"What's He Doing Now," a tri-weekly sports page feature with a two column cartoon is being offered by the Cosmos Newspaper Syndicate, New York. The feature, signed by "Maxwell," is designed to answer questions regarding what has become of old favorites in all branches of sport.

William J. McNulty is the writer of a new daily sports feature which has been added to the list offered by Current News Features, Inc., New York and Washington. It is based on the present activities of retired athletes.

Eleanor Gunn, style expert of the Fairchild Newspaper Service, reached Palm Beach Feb. 1, after spending the last four months in Europe. Miss Gunn is doing daily and weekly stories from Palm Beach and before returning next month will do a series of stories from Havana.

What is believed to be an innovation in the reporting of fashion news has been undertaken by the Fairchild Newspaper Service with the establishment of a daily cable service from Paris and European resorts in season. The cables are transcribed in New York and transmitted to the subscribing papers by telegraph. An idea of the completeness of the service may be gained from the daily cable "string," which during the recent spring openings ranged from 800 to 1,500 words and covered the showings of all the prominent houses.

Wheeler-Nicholson, Inc., announces that A. L. Brandt, formerly with McClure's Syndicate and the Readers' Syndicate, has joined its sales force and is now traveling in the Middle West for the firm.

John Van Bibber of the D. P. Syndicate sailed for Europe on the Olympic last week for the purpose of selling European first serial rights to Henry Ford's new book, "The Great Today, the Greater Future," scheduled for newspaper publication April 18.

Mr. Van Bibber's route will cover the various cities where newspapers have applied for the Ford rights, including London, Paris, Berlin, Stockholm, Christiana, Copenhagen, Hamburg, Dresden, Leipzig, Genoa and Turin.

Major Malcolm Wheeler-Nicholson, president of Wheeler-Nicholson, Inc., has a story in the January issue of McClure's Magazine, called "The Apology," based upon some of the Major's war experiences.

"Keeping Mentally Fit," a daily feature on practical psychology by Yale S. Nathanson, of the department of psychology, University of Pennsyvania, has been added to the list of the Ledger Syndicate, Philadelphia. The feature includes a question and answer department.

The Metropolitan Newspaper Service announces for syndication Mary Roberts Rinehart's latest mystery novel, "The Red Lamp," which will be ready for newspapers on April 1.

William Braucher, special writer for NEA Service, Inc., recently turned out a series of stories on the "Romance of Rubber."

"Brides, Beware" is an added semi-humorous woman's page feature added to the daily service of NEA Service, Inc. It is done by the two woman's page writers, Cynthia Grey and Ethel Hays.

Bruce Catton, NEA Service, Inc., special feature writer, recently visited the Osage, Oklahoma, district and wrote a series of stories on the Osage murder mystery.

The engagement of Robert G. Patterson, associate editor of the McClure Newspaper Syndicate, and Miss Eleanor Tunison of Westfield, N. J., was announced last week. The marriage will take place next October. Miss Tunison is the daughter of G. W. Tunison, official of the New York branch of the Bank of London and South America.

Cameramen Get Strike Pictures

O. J. Bauman and Tom Flanagan, photographers on the staff of the New York Daily Mirror, Hearst tabloid, eyewitnesses of a textile strike riot in Passaic, N. J., Feb. 9, obtained remarkable pictures of the fight showing policemen beating women to the snow with their clubs. Philip A. Payne, managing editor, played six of them on the front page Feb. 10. More were carried inside.

C. Vanderbilt Hits "Social Register"

Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., in a signed editorial in his Miami (Fla.) Tab, Feb. 9, attacked the "Social Register," declaring it was "utter folly to make the little book a Bible." He said his own ancestor five generations ago ferried passengers from Staten Island to New York. The editorial was based on the omission of the names of Mr. and Mrs. Irving Berlin from the Register.

"Bob" Davis Running Daily Column

Electric Refrigerator Manufacturers Approve Co-operative Advertising Program—H. W. Gossard Company Establishes Dallas Branch —Danning with duPont de Nemours

LEADING manufacturers of electrical refrigerators met at the Westchester-Biltmore Country Club, Rye, New York, recently, in the third of a series of meetings called for the purpose of considering the possibilities for co-operative activities which would benefit the industry as a whole.

Representatives of the following companies attended: Copeland Products Company; Delco-Light Company (manufacturers of Frigidaire); General Electric Company; Kelvinator Corporation; Nizer Corporation; Servel Corporation.

Definite action was taken approving a co-operative, market development program to be carried forward during the coming year by the Society for Electrical Development. Steps were also taken looking toward the formation of a permanent organization to be known as the Electric Refrigeration Council.

The movement to organize this new group in the industry was originally started by J. Robert Crouse who called an informal meeting at Waldenwoods, Michigan, in May, 1925, at which the Nizer Corporation was host.

A unique feature of the plan to organize the electric refrigerator manufacturers has been the bringing together of the sales, production, advertising and service managers and other department heads, in addition to the executives of the companies. The men representing each of these functions constitute committees to work out constructive plans for the progress of the industry.

The educational and market-development program offered by the Society for Electrical Development was approved by the departmental committees and an appropriation of $100,000 was made by the executive committee. The program calls for a series of full-page advertisements in the Saturday Evening Post starting in May, 1926, which will be coordinated with the advertising of the individual companies. E. G. Biechler, president of the Delco-Light Company, has been elected president of the temporary organization, with an executive committee as follows:

W. R. Wilson, president, Copeland Products Company; C. W. Stone, manager, Central Station Dept., General Electric Co.; A. H. Goss, president, Kelvinator Corporation; O. A. Glazebrooke, Jr., vice-president, Nizer Corporation; H. G. Scott, chairman of the board, Servel Corporation; F. M. Cockrell, secretary.

R. C. Stirton, president of the H. W. Gossard Company, has established a new distributing center in Dallas, Tex., to serve Texas, Louisiana, Oklahoma, Arkansas and New Mexico. The new office will open Feb. 15. Paid advertising for the company is handled by the Charles F. W. Nichols Company, Chicago advertising agency. Free publicity is sent out by Austin J. Carson & Associates, New York. Mr. Carson informed EDITOR & PUBLISHER this week that he understood from conversations he had recently with Mr. Nichols, that Gossard is planning to increase its appropriation to newspapers materially this year. Magazines have been preferred by the account heretofore.

A "hand-out" from the Carson office this week quotes Mr. Stirton as predicting 1926 will be a "banner year in the corset and lingerie industry."

The Gossard company recently opened a plant in Atlanta, Ga. Other distributing centers are maintained in New York, Chicago, and San Francisco.

Matthew J. Danning, a former Wilmington, Del., newspaper man, has been made assistant manager of the advertising department of E. I. duPont de Nemours & Co., explosives manufacturers.

An aggressive advertising campaign is planned by the concrete firms of the Northwest, as a result of the January meeting of the Northwest Concrete Products Association in Longview, Wash. Aberdeen was chosen as the next convention city, where the semi-annual meeting will be held in July, while Seattle was chosen for the annual meeting next January. Earl Braken of Aberdeen was chosen chairman of the committee which will have in charge the exploitation of concrete products through a well conducted advertising and publicity campaign.

To "banish the idea that plumbers are robbers who delight in loafing on the job," the California Sanitation Development League is planning a newspaper advertising campaign, according to L. J. Kruse, league president. Analyzing the power of the press, Mr. Kruse said:

"As the newspaper is to the public what sight and hearing is to the individual, educational newspaper advertising is the most direct, effective and economical means of quickly obtaining the results desired. Information given to the public in the form of advertising is more convincing than information given in any other manner."

The Quaker Oats Company declared an extra dividend this week of $2.50 a share on the common stock and regular quarterly dividends of 75 cents on the common, and 1½ per cent on the preferred. The common dividends are payable April 15, to stock of record April 1, and the preferred is payable May 29, to stock of record, May 1.

The Gillette Safety Razor Company reported net profits of $12,089,857 in 1925 after taxes, reserves and other deductions.

The Jewel Tea Company declared an extra dividend this week of $2.25 on account of accumulated dividends on its preferred stock, besides the regular quarterly of $1.75 on the preferred payable April 1, to stockholders of record March 18.

National advertising contracts amounting to $1,500,000 to be expended over the next three years were discussed at the convention of the West Coast Lumbermen's Association held recently in Seattle, Wash. About 400 of the leading lumbermen of the North Pacific Coast gathered to outline plans for the campaign. George S. Long of Tacoma, was chairman of the meeting having the advertising campaign in charge.

Corporations Flourish in

New York State

Greatest Trading Center of the Nation

The Corporation Bureau of New York reports that a new record was established in the number of incorporations chartered during 1925 by the Secretary of State.

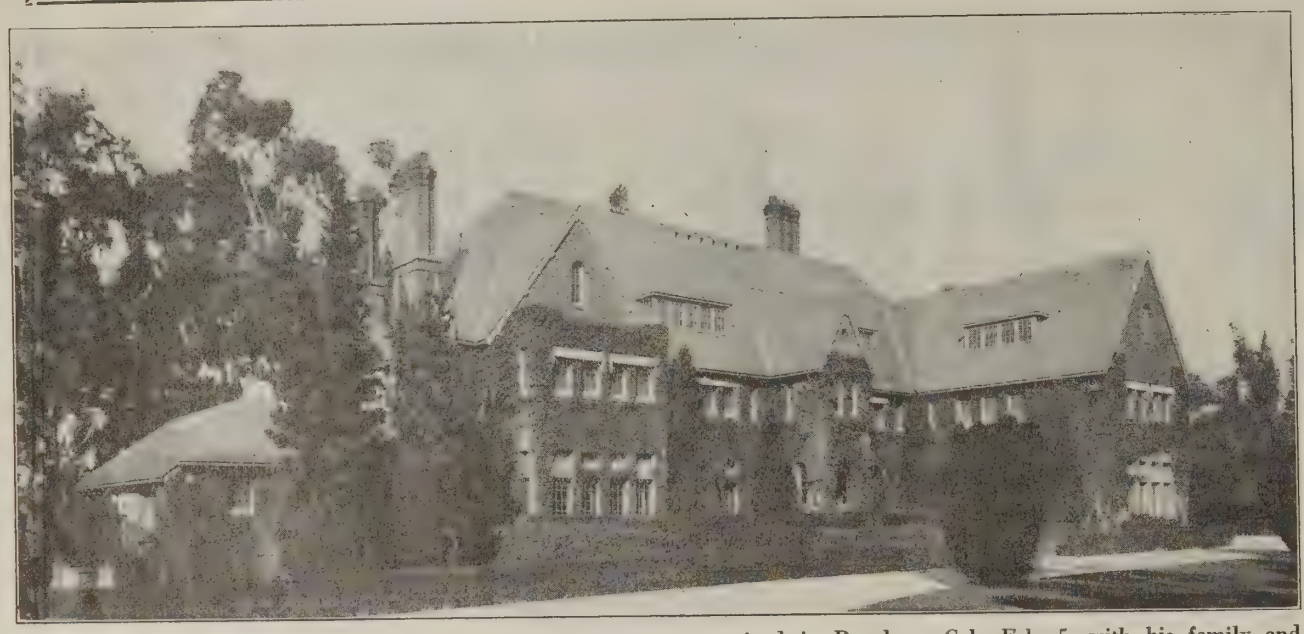
The number of new charters was 24,703, a gain of 5,154 over the previous year.

The entire scale of industries was covered by these new charters. In December one company was chartered whose principal purpose was given as the prolonging of life. Another will devote its efforts to turning out a superior brand of pies. A third will manufacture insect traps.

An idea of the tremendous amount of work involved in chartering so many corporations is furnished by the fact that a total of 53,585 letters were written and 11,056 telegrams sent in expediting the business of the bureau.

Earnings of many of the long established corporations have been notably large, thus testifying to an exceptionally heavy volume of business, and the constructive forces which made 1925 such a prosperous period still exist and in some respects have been strengthened.

The Empire State, leading the country in manufacturing, commerce and finance, is the greatest trading center of the nation.



An important feature of this great market is the excellent standard of the daily newspapers and the superior service which they extend to National Advertisers.

These Newspapers are the Leaders of the Sovereign State of New York

BRISBANE TAKES HOME IN PASADENA FOR WINTER

Arthur Brisbane, editorial writer for the Hearst newspapers, arrived in Pasadena, Cal., Feb. 5, with his family and staff and has established his winter headquarters in the residence shown above, one of the most beautiful and imposing Pasadena homes. Mr. Brisbane has leased the home of the late R. A. Rowan at 1170 Hillside Road for a period of three months, with an option to extend the lease for an additional six months. It is believed that he may purchase the property, thus making that city his permanent residence.

The Brisbane party, 20 in all, were greeted upon their arrival by a group of friends and newspaper reporters. Mr. Brisbane was accompanied by his wife, their six children, ranging in age from 12 to one, by his secretary, Emil Steinhauser, and a group of servants.

Mr. Brisbane plans to spend most of his time at the Rowan residence, with occasional visits to New York. A part of the big residence has been fitted up for Mr. Brisbane's editorial offices and his daily column will be put on the wires there.

CHINESE NEWSPAPERS POOR BUT VITAL

More Than 700 Dailies in Nation of No Advertising, Bad Communication and Giant Alphabet—Education Gaining Rapidly

Chinese journalism, despite handicaps which oppress none of its occidental prototypes, has become an important factor in the modern development of the awakening giant among nations, according to Dr. Sum Nung Au-Young, who is spending several weeks in the United States on a mission for the Peking government. Advertising patronage is scanty, communications across the plains and mountains of China are tenuous and doubtful, and the lack of a simple written language immensely complicates the task of disseminating information through the press.

DR. SUM AU-YOUNG

Nevertheless, says Dr. Au-Young, there are now more than 1,000 dailies, weeklies, and monthly publications issued in China, and more than 70 per cent of this number are dailies. Few of them are rich, in fact most of the newspapers in non-treaty ports are poor and many are subsidized by political parties and factions. Peking, the national capital, has more than 50 daily newspapers, only a few of which are economically and politically independent. Yet their inherent influence is great.

"It was the affairs of government that gave China its first newspapers," Dr. Au-Young continued. "The Peking Gazette was started hundreds of years ago, during the Ming Dynasty, which ruled China from 1368 to 1644. This newspaper carried no editorial comment and its news was largely confined to reports of imperial decrees and official announcements. It was issued daily. The provincial governors. They were issued origin, though still more ancient than the newspapers of the Western World, performed a similar function for the provincial governors. They were issued at the provincial capitals.

"Affairs of government continue to occupy the Chinese editor's mind, though he no longer speaks as the official mouthpiece of the ruler. Often he discloses conditions which the rulers would prefer hidden. For instance in 1918, members of the militaristic clique negotiated a loan with Japan for the construction of a railroad in northern Manchuria and Mongolia. Several newspapers learned that these funds were being diverted to other uses and published the story, exposing the looters. Six newspapers published in treaty ports were suppressed by the government for this display of enterprise.

"Yuan Shi Kai, self-proclaimed emperor, was overthrown by the press voicing public sentiment.

"In 1915, when the famous 21 demands were pressed upon China by Japan, the latter compelled the Chinese Government to secrecy, while the Japanese foreign office published the story that only 11 demands had been presented. Naturally, these 11 demands did not include those to which China objected and which would have been resented by friends of China. The Chinese press discovered the true nature of the Japanese proposals and it was through the Chinese newspapers that the world learned of Japan's real purposes."

Magazines and bi-weeklies are also numerous, Dr. Au-Young stated. Favorite titles of this branch of the press are "Renaissance," "Reconstruction," "Young China," and the like. Other periodicals which stand forth from the mass include one whose name can be translated as "Woman's Magazine" or "Ladies Journal," Labor's Magazine, Journal of Commerce and Agriculture, and the Journal of the Bankers' Association. All crafts and professions have their journals.

Numerous new magazines are published in the "pihwa," a relatively simple "alphabet" which contains 1,200 characters. This system of letters has the approbation of the Association for the Promotion of Mass Education, a group which has, according to Dr. Au-Young, educated more than 1,000,000 illiterates. The "pihwa," he declares, can be mastered by adults or children with only 96 hours of study and it is the opinion of its promoters that illiteracy will be a thing of the past in China within 20 years.

Dr. Au-Young, who this week invited the Press Congress of the World to hold its 1928 session at Peking, is, according to his card, Commissioner of Social and Economic Research in America and Europe, Director of the Chinese Government Bureau of Economic Information, Delegate to the Institute of Pacific Relations, and a Member of the Committee on Legal Conference under the auspices of the Pan-Pacific Union. His headquarters in New York are at the Hotel Astor.

OHIO PRESS RE-ELECTS

Snyder and Barrere Presidents—Columbus Office Urged

The Associated Ohio Dailies and the Buckeye Press Associations held their annual meetings in Columbus the week of Feb. 1.

A committee of the Associated Ohio Dailies will investigate during the coming year the advisability of establishing a central office in Columbus as legislative bureau headquarters and a clearing house for information.

President R. C. Snyder of the Norwalk Reflector-Herald and all the other officers of the Associated Ohio Dailies were re-elected.

The employment of a full-time secretary and a definite program for the year was recommended by Granville Barrere, of the Hillsboro News-Herald, in a message to the Buckeye Press Association. Mr. Barrere is in Florida. He was re-elected president of the association together with all the other officers. Don C. Bailey of the West Mansfield Banner was chosen district vice-president. A committee from the Buckeye Press Associaton will cooperate with a committee from the Associated Ohio Dailies in the preparation of a form for publication of annual city, county and school financial statements.

NEW INVENTION FOUND TO TRANSMIT PHOTOS

Pictures May Be Flashed Across Atlantic "In an Instant" by New Discovery Announced in Rome—Carolus, Inventor

A new discovery by which, according to claim, a picture may be flashed across the Atlantic "in an instant," whether a portrait or an entire newspaper page, was announced in Rome, Feb. 9, an exclusive dispatch to the New York Herald Tribune states.

The new process is being worked out in various European laboratories, especially that of the Telefunken Gelellschaft, Berlin, as a result of five years' development of the Carolus cell—a highly sensitive photo-electric cell, named after its inventor, Dr. Carolus.

This cell replaces the silenum cells hitherto used in picture transmission, though too slow for satisfactory results. The transmission, based on the Kerr method, consists in influencing a ray of polarized light in such a manner that high voltage produces a strong ray, while low voltage produces a weaker ray.

The voltage variations are instantaneously accompanied by equal variations in the light ray influencing the photographic negative. The Carolus photo-electric cell transforms every light variation into electricity, with enormously accelerated transmission. The new cell itself produces only small currents, which must be amplified by radio telegraphy.

It is claimed for the system that complete photographs are available at their destination five minutes after transmission, whether from London, Paris or New York.

COMBINATION PUBLISHERS MEET

New Organization to Convene in Kansas City, Feb. 16

The Combination Newspaper Publishers Association will meet in the Baltimore Hotel, Kansas City, at 10:30 o'clock, Feb. 16, Cowgill Blair, general manager of the Joplin (Mo.) Globe and News-Herald and secretary of the Association announced this week.

The program will be informal. Each speaker will be asked to discuss his topic for ten minutes following which he will lead a short general discussion. The following subjects with leaders have been chosen:

Standardization of National Advertising Practice—H. H. Horton, Okmulgee (Okla.) Times & Democrat.

Local Advertising Practices on the Oklahoma City Oklahoman and Times—L. E. Drier, advertising manager.

The Management of Combination Newspapers Where Competition Exists —Harry T. Watts, Des Moines Register and Tribune-News; A. G. Newmeyer, New Orleans Item-Tribune.

Policy Management, or Walking the Tight Wire—W. Y. Morgan, Hutchinson (Kan.) News & Herald; T. E. Nowels, Colorado Springs Gazette and Telegraph.

How the Muskogee Phoenix and Times-Democratic Operate Separately, and Why—Joel H. Bixby.

Should Combination Publishers Join in a Cooperative Campaign to Sell the Combination Idea (a) Nationally? (b) Locally?—J. S. Parks, Ft. Smith (Ark.) Southwest American & Times Record.

The Combination Newspaper Publishers' Association is a new group organized at the annual meeting of the Audit Bureau of Circulations in Chicago last October.

DAILY BUYS LOCAL WEEKLY

Mississippi Valley Leader Sold to Blytheville (Ark.) Courier News

The Blytheville (Ark.) Mississippi Valley Leader, has been purchased by Edgar G. Harris and Beulah L. Harris, owners and publishers of the Blytheville Daily Courier News. The Leader will be issued in future from the Courier News plant and the plant used by the weekly publication will be converted into an exclusive job printing establishment.

The Courier News was purchased by Mr. and Mrs. Harris in September, 1925.

Before locating in Blytheville, Mr. Harris published the Laurel (Miss.) Daily Leader for 12 consecutive years, selling that property to James Skewes and associates.

HOUSTON CLUB FORMED

The News Writers Launched By Houston Newspaper Workers

The News Writers, a social club of workers on the editorial departments of the city's three daily newspapers, has just been organized in Houston, Tex., with 33 members.

It's sole purpose is to promote good fellowship among reporters, desk men, photographers and staff artists. A paragraph prohibiting any organized salary demands is to be incorporated in the constitution.

All of the newspapers have endorsed the club editorially. Definite plans have been made for financing the establishment and maintenance of a club house.

Frank Gibler, reporter for the Houston Press, was elected temporary president. Ernest Sparks, humorist, with 15 years' experience on Texas newspapers, was elected secretary and treasurer.

Greenwald to Atlantic City

M. H. Greenwald has been named business manager of the Atlantic City (N. J.) Daily Press, Evening Union and Sunday Press published by the Press-Union Publishing Company, A. J. Feyl, president. Mr. Greenwald was for 16 years manager of the special advertising department of the Philadelphia Public Ledger, being particularly active in automobile, travel and resort advertising.

ILLINOIS

The general statement that Illinois is about ready to take its place as the second state in the Union in financial resources, supported only by figures showing bank clearings, etc., means little; but when this same statement is made and backed by figures compiled by the Bureau of Statistics and Research of the Federal Reserve Bank, Seventh District, showing the ratio of the capital invested in manufacturing projects in the rest of the United States, the business man, knowing that Illinois is the center of the district, is very apt to glimpse a vision of the future of this state.

In this territory of great purchasing power, the success of nationally advertised merchandise has kept step with the rising financial condition. Get in line.

This state is no longer a "try out" territory. The cooperation of these leading Illinois daily newspapers is at your disposal.

LETTERS FROM OUR READERS

Free Railroad Publicity

To Editor & Publisher: It appears that the Illinois Central has joined the ranks of the free publicity seekers. We were recently advised that our paper would not receive the Illinois Central's Florida advertising that we had received in former years. But following this advice we received a very attractive illustrated news story with request for free insertion. We replied as follows:

Jan. 20, 1926.

H. S. Gray,
Illinois Passenger Agent,
Dubuque, Ia.

Dear Mr. Gray:

A few days ago we received a very attractive illustrated news story of Florida in mat form. It was a very fine story, but it disclosed reference to the Illinois Central which put it in the classification of advertising news.

We were just wondering if there had not been some misunderstanding and that we had been recommended for the free publicity schedule instead of a paid advertising schedule.

However, if that was not a mistake, and was intended, we would be glad for you to call on the writer and see what arrangements could be made for free transportation before we start the publication of any free publicity.

Yours truly,
J. N. Stonebraker,
Vice-President of Freeman-Journal Co.

We want to commend you for the stand that your publication is taking against the free publicity seekers. Ours is one of the smaller dailies but we make an absolute distinction between general news and advertising news. We tell both local and national advertisers who request free publicity that it is just as unreasonable for them to request it as it would be for us to make request for free merchandise or its equivalent from their institution.

J. N. Stonebraker,
Freeman-Journal Publishing Co.,
Webster City, Iowa.

"Very Much Worth While"

To Editor & Publisher: I perhaps have an exaggerated idea of the importance of the schools and departments of journalism. I seem to think they are one of the most important, if not the most important, engines for the future improvement of journalism and all its branches, so I am inclined to think the series (on schools of journalism now appearing in Editor & Publisher) very much worth while. True, on occasion I feel that some of the information furnished to you on a given school has not been wisely chosen.

Roy L. French,
Head of the Dept. of Journalism.
University of North Dakota.

When Is News Hot?

To Editor & Publisher: Every line of business has its crying need. The radio business is crying for a static eliminator, the talking machine business for a way to eliminate that scratching noise and the automobile business for a non-glaring headlight.

The newspaper business is no different. It, too, has its crying need. It needs a News Thermometer to register exactly how hot a story is.

This instrument is not needed particularly by the editors, the copyreaders and the reporters throughout the country. By years of experience these workers have developed the ability to determine the warmth of news without the aid of an instrument.

But such an instrument is needed for certain individuals of the great general public who think they can guess news values without experience and without an instrument.

No layman would trust his ability to guess the number of apples required to make a bushel. He would not trust his judgment of speed enough to claim he could guess the exact speed of an automobile. He would not claim to be able to guess the exact weight of a cow, the exact temperature of a room, or the exact number of feet to a distant hill.

He does not think his human estimates better than the recordings of scientific instruments. Yet this very layman who believes in bushel measures, speedometers, thermometers, scales and tape-lines will presume to tell an editor or a reporter just exactly how big a story is and how it should be played.

The editor is helpless. He is busy. He does not have time to enter into a joint debate on just why the fact that John Jones has bought a new soda fountain for his drugstore is not a page-one story instead of a five-line personal on the inside.

John Jones cannot see the measuring stick the editor is using on his tendered news. Therefore he comes to the conclusion that the editor is prejudiced against him personally or that the editor doesn't know news when he sees it.

Here is where the News Thermometer would come in handy. If John Jones got nasty Mr. Editor could put the News Thermometer on his proffered news in his presence and show him it was just about as hot as an Eskimo's nose.

Any editor can see what a great help such an instrument would be in handling that constant stream of visitors to the editorial rooms who are eternally trying to get something in the paper that is not news and trying to keep something out that is.

Realizing the great value of such an invention I am devoting my entire time to the development of such an instrument and hope you will find space in your columns to mention it so the distressed and distracted editors of the nation will know that relief is in sight.

Inventively yours.
ART GUM.

Weeklies as Ad Mediums

To Editor & Publisher: It has always been a great mystery to me why advertising men in general have not discovered the country weekly. The article by Bert Moses on that very subject in a recent issue of Editor & Publisher is certainly most timely, and I congratulate you on it.

While advertisers rush pell mell to buy quantities of high priced space in metropolitan dailies and national magazines that are already over-crowded with display they ignore the fact that the small town paper, daily or weekly, has plenty of space for their display at a reasonable figure and furthermore, has a great deal of prestige.

No one, literally no one, has time or inclination to read all of a 42-page paper every day, and only the most striking ads are ever seen by the majority of readers. On the other hand, just about 100% of the subscribers to the small town or country weekly read every word printed, news columns and advertising, every week. It's usually small enough and chatty enough to make this a real pleasure.

The country weekly serves its field admirably. It offers local news its subscribers can get nowhere else. It prints convincing editorials on many matters, local or otherwise. It developes loyalty to home institutions. It supports home, church and school. It pleads in vain with advertisers to use its columns, and urges readers to spend their money in the local stores. And, what's more, it does mould opinion. Truly an admirable medium for any maker or distributor of national goods.

The true "palladium of liberty," or "bulwark of democracy" still exists. It's the country weekly!

W. P. ELSON.

Service to the Schools

To Editor & Publisher: I believe your articles on courses in journalism are worth while. They are doing more to acquaint the newspaper editors with what happens to a student when he goes to a College of Journalism than any other thing that has come to my attention. A work of that character is certainly a great service to the schools of journalism, and should be of some help to the editors.

J. L. SULLIVAN,
Director of Journalism, Marquette University, Milwaukee.

TEXAS LIBEL LAWS HARSH

Denison Editor Says They Deprive Public of Necessary Information

Declaring that the Texas libel law has been interpreted by the courts as a "legalized censorship," Henry E. Ellis, editor of the Denison Herald, in an address at McKinney, Tex., said the people are greater losers than the newspapers as a result. Discounting popular belief that Texas libel laws are unusually harsh, Mr. Ellis said:

"Clearly it was the intention of framers of the law to make it possible for newspapers to give accurate reports of what is said and done at public meetings conducted for public purposes. Under decision of the courts following enactment of the law, however, the papers are not permitted the privilege. The old common law still operates."

Mr. Ellis' remarks, made at a Lions' Club meeting, centered about that portion or the law known as "declaration of privileged matter," which imparts to newspapers the right to give "a true, fair and impartial account of public meetings organized and conducted for public purposes only."

"Very few public meetings—political meetings—are conducted these days at which matter libelous per se does not present itself. And yet the people are entitled to know just what was said and done in order to understand thoroughly the issues that come up. For fear of damage suits, however, publishers withhold valuable news sometimes which may not be libelous, but about which they must be careful."

Publishers will not expose themselves to damage suits merely for "education of the public," said Mr. Ellis, in urging the public to contend for the privilege which court ruling denies the press.

too many facts and not enough of the spirit of the merchandise. The advertising man is not given an opportunity of absorbing the atmosphere of the place or the manner from which or in which the merchandise comes or is made.

"A merchant could invest his money in no better way than to send his advertising man with the buyers to market. Or to have him present when the salesmen are offering their wares. This would certainly help in producing harmony but I would recommend that a still further step be taken for co-ordination.

"The advertising man's job should not be considered finished until the merchandise is actually in the hands of the public, and he cannot put it there with paper space, fine words and beautiful illustrations. The sales people supply the final link, between the newspaper ad and consumer. This being true, if we are to have harmony in selling, the sales people must know when to sing. Who can better write their tune and direct their singing than the ad man, so the next step for co-ordination is a new job for the ad man.

One of the greatest opportunities a store has to sell its community presents itself in its yearly or semi-annual compaigns, according to Mr. White.

"The spirit of these campaigns should be to serve the community," he said. "Literally every activity of a store serves its community but in reality they merely sell merchandise.

"In this connection, stores should use their campaigns to promote some phase of their business or community in addition to the exploitation of merchandise. It is true that many successful sales are staged over the country which are entirely divorced to selling a community. They merely sell goods. A broader approach to campaigns is found in the idea of promoting some department of activities of the community in addition to selling merchandise. It is a store's privilege to do this and a store's obligation. It not only sells goods and makes profits but builds wonderful lasting prestige for the institution. For the community it spot lights in an extraordinary manner a phase of the community which perhaps is unknown. A store operating their campaigns in this manner is bound to make a public servant of themselves and to be respected as such.

"In the Fall Festival of 1925 the Rike-Kumler Company chose the theme of American Industries. It felt few people of Dayton and Miami Valley realized the progress and proportion of the colossal industries which furnish the major part of the merchandise distributed through our store. It also realized that anything industrially would have a definite and vital appeal to our customers because Dayton is distinctly an industrial community.

"So it definitely chose to promote American Industries and American Made Goods during its Fall Festival. We carried as our slogan throughout the campaign 'A Tribute to the Genius, Skill and Craftsmanship of American Industries'. We recognized that by far the greater majority of merchandise distributed in retail stores is conceived and developed in American Mills and factories. We wanted our customers to know the fact.

"This is the type of appeal which we commend to the use of every far reaching and broad visioned merchant of the country. We especially commend the use of this idea of paying a tribute to American industries. A store using this idea will pay their respects to an activity of this country which justly deserves it and at the same time will cause their customers to turn towards their store to buy American Made Merchandise at a legitimate profit."

N. Y. TIMES INTERVIEWS MEXICAN PRESIDENT

Calles Tells L. C. Speers Press of Mexico Is Free—Washington Correspondent on Roving News Assignment Across Border

An exclusive interview with President Calles of Mexico was obtained last week for the New York Times by L. C. Speers, member of its Washington bureau sent to Mexico on a roving news assignment by F. T. Burchell, acting managing editor. Mr. Speers has been connected with the Times for more than 20 years. He will remain in Mexico "as long as there is any news there," Mr. Burchell informed EDITOR & PUBLISHER.

Mr. Speers in the interview with President Calles asked him if the report that he was resentful of the attitude of a large section of the American press was true, and if so what were his reasons.

"As in all cases," General Calles replied, "one part of the American press is friendly and the other is antagonistic. Very likely the antagonism existing is due mainly to ignorance regarding the situation created over the land laws."

Once more reports were cited—this time the report that the Mexico City press is dominated by the Government. The president was reminded of the bitter assaults upon the American government and President Coolidge. One report called to his attention by the correspondent was that an administration organ had asserted that the "White House reeked with the odor of oil."

"The press of our country," President Calles emphatically replied, "enjoys an amount of freedom I do not believe to be smaller than that granted in the United States. As for the rest of the question, it would be better answered by the directors of Mexico's newspapers."

TRIBUTE TO MISS LOEB

Congress Praises N. Y. Evening World Writer and Welfare Worker

A remarkable tribute was paid Sophie Irene Loeb, member of the New York Evening World staff, and president of the Child Welfare Committee, during debate of the Widowed Mothers' Aid Bill, which passed the House in Washington, Feb. 9.

Miss Loeb has always insisted that the mothers' aid, or mothers' pension, was not "charity," and that there should be no charity stigma about it.

It was largely through her efforts that the provision for an independent mothers' aid board was put into the bill.

In glowing terms Representative John J. Boylan of New York, and John J. O'Connor, referred to Miss Loeb, who sat in the gallery during the debate, as the "little mother of child welfare." They paid high tribute to her many years of service to the widows and orphans of the world.

UNIQUE POLICY TRIAL IN SPRINGFIELD

Republican and Union, Now Under Same Ownership, Continuing Opposite Courses on Problems of the Day

A unique experiment in American journalism was launched this week in Springfield, Mass., with the first issue of the combined Sunday Union and Sunday Republican, which ran to 94 pages. Purchase of the Union two weeks ago by the Bowles family, publishers of the Republican for a century and more, was the first step in this unusual plan, which has resulted in the same owners running daily papers fighting each other, yet on Sunday declaring truce to appear as a combined issue.

There are now two morning papers, two afternoon papers and a combined Sunday paper in the city, all controlled by the Bowles family. Classified advertising is inserted in all four dailies at a price from two to four cents less a line than the cost formerly under separate ownership and a common advertising office is maintained for the handling of display advertising.

Economies in the mechanical side are effected through the transfer of mats of display ads from one paper to the other, thus cutting in half the cost of setting the ads and at the time of going to press the morning and evening editions of the Union are being run off on the Republican's presses, mats of the Union's pages being rolled out at the Union plant and taken to the Republican plant for casting and the printing of the paper.

On the editorial side the arrangement provides still more interesting angles. For years the Union and the Republican have staunchly supported opposite sides on practically all issues of the day. On the prohibition question this divergence has been specially marked in recent years. The Union has attained wide renown as a "wet" paper, probably the stoutest opponent to Volstead in New England, while the Republican distinguished itself even before prohibition by barring brewers' advertisements from the paper.

The Bowles famly, which comprises Sherman H. Bowles, general manager of the Republican, Admiral Bowles, and Richard Hooker, a nephew of the third Samuel Bowles, has placed itself in the position of paying for the printing of the "other side" on all the controversial questions that arise.

Special writers for the Sunday Union are conducting their pages in the combined Sunday issue of both papers and while there has been some shifting around in the editorial staff there has been nothing comparable to the wholesale exodus that generally follows a merger.

Waldo Cook, editor of the Republican since ill health caused Richard Hooker to withdraw in 1922, is at the helm of that paper. Maurice S. Sherman, who has guided the editorial destinies of the Union under different owners for more than a dozen years, continues in charge of the Union.

New York Weekly Suspends

The Oakland (N. Y.) Independent, a weekly, has suspended publication. Vaughn Washburn of Silver Creek has been editor of the paper, which was founded in October, 1925.

MIAMI TAB SHAKE-UP

Vanderbilt Dismisses Seventy-seven Employes, Charging Plot to Ruin Paper

(By Telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

MIAMI, Fla., Feb. 7.—Changing his trip to San Francisco at an eleventh hour notice, Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., just out of a sick bed at Johns Hopkins Hospital, accompanied by his personal assistant, John W. Brodix, reached here early Saturday morning, and from his sick bed at a local hotel here today he directed a complete reorganization of the staff of the Illustrated Daily Tab. Frank Bailey, who has been in charge for some time was dismissed, as were the city, news, copy and make-up editors; 17 members of the editorial staff; 15 members of the composing room; three bookkeepers; four photographers; one artist; one engraver; two janitors and various sundry telephone operators, office boys, etc.

Mr. Vanderbilt appointed Herbert Hewson as business manager; Thomas Brodix as assistant business manager; Marion Hatch, from the San Francisco Herald, as managing editor; F. R. Milles, from the Los Angeles News, as supervising auditor; J. D. Holbrook as general auditor; J. L. Mathews as foreman of the composing room; Joel Y. Rickman, of the San Francisco Herald as city editor; Larry Daily as sporting editor, and M. O. Shevlin as combination news, make-up and copy editor. Mr. Vanderbilt further stated that the status of the advertising, circulation, engraving, press and stereotyping departments would not be affected by the change in management.

A rumor current that the publication of a New York tabloid was contemplated was emphatically denied by the publisher here this evening.

Mr. Vanderbilt is quoted as saying that his unexpected arrival "nipped in the bud" an attempt to ruin his Miami newspaper.

Mr. Vanderbilt telegraphed the following statement to EDITOR & PUBLISHER:

"I suspect other persons were interested in seeing us go out of business, or it just may have been incompetency.

"A rumor was circulated by some executives whom I discharged that we would not meet our payroll. This so aroused the news staff that it seemed as though the entire force would leave us high and dry for our Sunday paper.

"When I reached here I spent all night and the next day going over the qualifications and charges against every person discharged. In all I let 77 go.

"Auditors from headquarters found no dishonesty, although a great amount of irregularity.

"Things are moving nicely now.

"I will stay here until I return to Johns Hopkins Hospital the first week in March."

Copy Holder Finds Stolen Car

The retentive memory of a copy holder in the proof reading room of the Springfield (Mass.) Union made possible the recovery of a stolen automobile in record time last Monday. The car in question was stolen from the business section of the city about 10 o'clock Sunday night, the theft reported to the police and through the Union's police reporter turned into copy and sent to the composing room. Ernest A. Parker, the copyholder, noted the registration numbers as the copy passed through his hands. At 3 o'clock in the morning, on his way home from work, he recognized the numbers on a car parked in the street, telephoned the police department.

Radical Editor Arrested

Charged with blasphemy and with inciting to riot, Anthony Bimba, editor of Freedom, of Brooklyn, N. Y., was arrested in Worcester, Mass., last week for the police of Brockton, Mass., where he is alleged to have advocated the overthrow of government in an address before the Lithuanian Citizens' Club. In court he pleaded not guilty and was released in $1,500 bonds for a hearing. This was the first time in the memory of Brockton court officials that anyone had faced the charge of blasphemy, the warrant having been sworn out under an old Puritanical statute of the early Massachusetts Bay colony.

THREE COAST REPORTERS PARTICIPATE IN BULLET PUNCTUATED BANDIT CHASE

THREE reporters for the Sacramento Bee recently went on a "lark" with two detectives of the Sacramento police department, Jan. 25, and were participants in as thrilling a bandit chase as ever was staged in the wild and woolly west.

In a running gun-battle with four desperadoes who had two hours previous held up a bank in broad daylight and fled with more than $45,000 in cash, bullets splashed against the bullet-proof windshield, shots sizzled through the top of the car, rang against the metal of the machine or whistled along the pavement beneath. But the reporters came back to the office unscathed, though scared, in time to write human interest stories for the "extra." One of the bandits was killed and the other three captured after a battle in which hundreds of shots were exchanged.

The reporters who "fell into" this unusual experience were Frank Sullivan, police reporter, and Hamilton Hintz and J. W. McDonald of the Superior California department.

In the words of Sullivan:

"We had started out on a lark. We had never intended to come to a hand-to-hand battle with the bandits. All we intended to do was to guard a bridge nearby because we had received word that the highwaymen were headed in that direction in a high-powered car. The two police detectives were in the front seat and the three reporters in the back.

"As a matter of course we looked over passing machines. At a country store we saw a car with four occupants driving very slowly. The police were just about to pass them up as farmers when one had a 'hunch' they ought to question them.

"As the police car swung around, the 'mystery' automobile leaped ahead, shot over a knoll and disappeared. The police car took up the pursuit.

"It was a game of hare and hounds with the hounds gaining steadily.

"We in the rear seat watched the speedometer, fascinated as it spun around to 70 miles an hour, then 75.

"From the oblong curtain glass in the rear of the fleeing car came a small puff of smoke. The police returned the fire and the battle was on.

"As the gun fight increased the two cars slowed and finally came to a stop, 90 feet apart. For several minutes more the battle continued. One bullet from a bandit's gun took a small nick out of McDonald's hat.

"Then suddenly the firing from the bandit car ceased. First a hand showed, then an arm and finally the body of a man creeping on his hands and knees from the tonneau of the car, came into sight. He crept across the running board and flopped on to the highway with his arms lifted. Then another man and another.

"The dectectives advanced cautiously, fearing a ruse, with the fourth man in the car ready to rake the officers down. It was a tense moment when a detective, with levelled gun, threw open the door of the car and discovered the fourth bandit—dead."

All of the loot, exceeding $45,000, was recovered. The men were recognized as ex-convicts. They were speedily tried and re-sentenced to prison.

The detectives received rewards amounting to more than $3,000, and the reporters each received a small medal from the business office force inscribed: "We would rather give you this than flowers."

Association Sending Out Questionnaires to Obtain Scientific Basis for Rate Schedules and to Solve Other Problems

Questionnaires are being sent out by the Association of Newspaper Advertising Executives seeking to obtain definite figures covering advertising and selling costs. Figures thus obtained would provide a scientific basis for rate schedules and would be an important factor in the solution of numerous rate problems, Frank T. Carroll, Indianapolis News, and association president, has announced.

As an answer to the agency complaint of discrimination in national advertising rates, the information would be of untold value to newspapers, he said. Individual reports will be held confidential. It is unnecessary to sign the questionnaire, which follows in full:

(For uniformity, please do not include general overhead, such as rent, light, heat, etc., in the following figures.)

1. Your selling cost for local display advertising was what per cent of your total revenue from local display advertising in 1925? ——— %. "Selling cost" is understood to include salaries of salesmen, executives and clerical help, proper share of promotion expense, etc.
2. What was your 1925 average net rate per line for local display?
3. Your selling cost for national display advertising was what per cent of your total revenue from national display advertising in 1925? ——— %. "Selling cost" is understood to include salaries of salesmen, executives and clerical help, payments to special representatives, merchandising service, proper share of promotion expense, etc. Do not include advertising agency commissions as a sales expense.
4. What was your 1925 average net rate per line for national display?
5. Your selling cost for classified advertising was what per cent of your total revenue from classified advertising in 1925? ——— %. "Selling cost" is understood to include salaries of salesmen, executives, clerical help and telephone girls, proper share of promotion expense, etc.
6. What was your 1925 average net rate per line for classified advertising?
7. Your total selling cost for local display, national display and classified advertising was what per cent of your total revenue from all three classes in 1925? ——— %.
8. What was your 1925 average net rate per line for total advertising?
9. What is the relative cost of handling an equal amount of local, national and classified advertising after it is sold? "Cost of handling" is understood to include mechanical and composition costs, billing and collections, credit losses, cost of salaries, wages and clerical help in departments performing these functions. TO FIGHT FLORIDA FRAUDS

Three Months Campaign Directed at Real Estate Swindlers

To protect the public from nation-wide swindles said to be originating in Florida, the National Better Business Bureau, the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, and the Florida State Chamber of Commerce announced this week they had joined forces to drive real estate sharks from that state.

All the resources of the national bureau will be used in the campaign, it was asserted.

John N. Garver, former manager of the Buffalo Better Business Bureau will direct a staff of field investigators who will co-operate with state and federal officers. The campaign will last three months, according to H. J. Kenner, general manager of the New York bureau who recently returned from Jacksonville.

"Florida business men are sincere and united in their determination to drive crooks and tricky operators from the state," Mr. Kenner declared.

PLOT TO BUY REPORTER EXPOSED BY DAILY

Managing Editor, Lansing Capital News Uses Two Columns on Page 1 to Describe Attempt — Later Names Lawyer

Open charges that an effort was made by a Lansing attorney to bribe one of its reporters to "soften" news of the approaching re-trial of Arthur C. Rich, wealthy Battle Creek youth charged with criminal assault upon a Battle Creek college girl, were made in its news columns by the Lansing (Mich.) Capital News, Feb. 5.

According to a two-column, signed front page article by Walter Morrow, managing editor, the sum of $50 was turned over to Frank T. White of the News reportorial staff, on condition that he use his efforts in making news of the Rich case assume a more favorable tone toward young Rich. In a later edition of the paper, Roy T. Chrouch, a local attorney who was retained some time ago by the Rich defense, after a disagreement in the Calhoun county court and a change of venue had brought the second trial to Ingham county, was named as the man who proffered the bribe. Chrouch denied the charge but said that, because of the unfavorable publicity already given the defense through the charge, he would not act further in the matter until after the trial, which begins at Mason, Feb. 15.

"I believe in the newspaper profession," Morrow wrote, "because I have been under the ax with the fellows in a hundred battles, and I never found one of them who would flinch when the test came.

"For that reason I have great contempt for the jackal who thinks he can buy a newspaper man. He is in my lexicon as a sap—a blunderer—one who is headed for destruction."

The earlier trial of the case in Battle Creek roused great interest throughout the state, the evidence brought out being of a sensational nature.

Charges have been made repeatedly by the state that the Rich defense has been trying to build up a propaganda machine in an effort to change sentiment of this section in favor of young Rich.

Muddiman calls attention to a ious quarrel which broke out bee leading coffee men of London newspaper proprietors. Growing is quarrel the coffee-house keep-ished a pamphlet entitled The the Coffee Men of London and ster: or, an account of the imand abuses put upon them and le town by the present set of riters. With the scheme of the en for setting up newspapers of n and some account of their pro-thereupon. The description of t by Mr. Muddiman sheds conlight on press conditions in ct states that the "true and natural of the coffee men was to furnish the news themselves "from the stores of e in their own hands," for the nade use of by the newswriters ex-h themselves and their productions most contempt." Persons were eme or two for each paper, at so week, "to haunt coffee houses and mselves into companies" where they known, in order to overhear what betray family secrets. They also loitered about public offices "like housebreakers, waiting for an interview with some little clerk, or a conference with a doorkeeper in order to come at a little news or an account of transactions; for which the fee is a shilling or a pint of wine." The Lords of the Admiralty were so well aware of this that the fellow with the black wig (we should like to know who this was) was forbidden to enter and the clerks and doorkeepers ordered to beware of him. When these scouts, after neglecting business all day by playing cribbage in an ale house, had no news, they had recourse to fiction, and drew up treaties, hanged for love and drowned for despair, told of deaths, robberies and revolutions, and turned the world upside down; and thus "getting rid of the Business of the day, go to sleep with great Satisfaction till the rising Sun calls them again to the same Shining Employments." The "death hunters" were also fed by the undertakers.

The outcome of this quarrel is recorded as follows by Mr. Muddiman:

The coffee men's news project seems to have been nipped in the bud by the trenchant reply of the newspaper proprietors. Gentlemen, said they, frequented the coffee houses, not for "a dish or a dram," for which they paid more than their intrinsic value, but for the newspapers and for conversation. And as for the coffee-house keepers, who themselves proposed to usurp the office of collectors of news, what were they—"cast-off valets, discarded footmen, etc., who, marrying their fellow-servants, turn into this way of business purely because they can do nothing else." And as for the number of newspapers, that was an actual benefit to the coffee houses, as they drew more customers. Time was, said the newspaper proprietors, when coffee was sold at a penny a dish, or three halfpence on a scarcity; but when the tax on newspapers raised their price to three halfpence, then the coffee men charged two pence a dish, chocolate being three pence. Besides these drinks they also sold gill and fine ales, and great quantities of punch, all which was clear profit, whereas the newspapers, out of the three half-pence they received, paid one halfpenny to the Government and another to the mercury, or hawker.

Finally, the scheme of the coffee-house keepers was termed "a rebellion of the members against the head," and the newspaper proprietors announced their determination to erect about half a dozen coffee houses in the neighborhood of those most active against the newspapers. In these coffee houses, liquors sold for two pence a dish were to be sold for three half-pence, those for three half-pence for a penny, and punch for a shilling a quart less. Each house was to have a board outside with "ALL the papers taken in here" on it; and committees were to be formed to purchase the very best liquors and to select ladies of unblemished reputation as manageresses. Nothing more was heard of the coffee-house keepers' scheme.

Newspapers by the end of the seventeenth century were carrying a miscellaneous lot of advertisements. Indeed, the advertising end was recognized as one of the greatest sources of profit to the newspaper proprietor. Already the newspaper was coming to be looked upon by the reading public as a piece of joint production in that it had two things for sale—reading and advertising—both of which must be wrapped in the same container, the white paper on which both were printed.

As early as 1728, the year on which the quarrel between the London coffee house keepers and the London newspapers attracted so much attention, the following complaint about too much advertising in the papers was made by the coffee-house men:

Another complaint the coffee men have against the managers of the present newspapers is that they are made tools and properties of in the business of advertising. They stipulate for news, not advertisements. Yet the papers are ordinarily half-full of them. The Daily Post, for example, is often equipped with thirty, which yield three pounds fifteen shillings that day to the proprietors for the least. And sometimes that paper has more. Well may they divide TWELVE HUNDRED POUNDS A YEAR AND UPWARDS! They are paid on both hands—paid by the advertisers for taking in Advertisements and paid by the coffee men for delivering them out; which (to make use of a homely comparison) is to have a good dinner every day and be paid for eating it. Here's luck, my lads. Never was there so fortunate a business.

From the eighteenth century on the history of newspaper advertising in England, the United States, and other countries is too well-known to need farther comment in this department.

4½ BUSHELS OF CORN BUYS A SUBSCRIPTION

THE Urbana (Ill.) Daily Courier announced recently it would take 4½ bushels of corn in exchange for a yearly subscription to the paper. This means $1 a bushel for the corn, as the daily's yearly rate is $4.50.

The announcement stated the plan was adopted in an effort to help the farmers.

THE idea of awarding prizes to carrier boys is not a new one. It is, however, a good plan to publish a story about the boy who wins the weekly or monthly prize, and if possible publish his photograph. It makes good local copy, lets the subscribers know the newspaper is doing its best to give the utmost in carrier service, and creates a fine spirit of loyalty to the publishers and competition among themselves on the part of the newsies.—Helen Capron Helsby, Mechanicville, N. Y.

Wages of workers go on Saturady evenings for ephemeral enjoyment. Many persons seek places where dancing and dining are good, recuperate on Sunday and return to their treadmill tasks on Monday. A Northwest paper features with success every Saturday a double truck of display ads entitled: "Where to dine and dance," including ads of places where the two popular Saturday evening enjoyments are combined.—C. M. L.

The growth of the auto business is resulting in many distributing firms building new headquarters. Detroit News recently at the opening of a new dealer-distributor headquarters of a large concern took advantage of the occasion to put out a special section with the usual local auto ads and sizeable ads from many of the suburban and rural dealers. A similar announcement should be possible in other cities where the leading dealers are opening new buildings.—A. N.

Often lost track of while a contest is on, nevertheless the main purpose of the contest conducted by a newspaper is to create Friends. Therefore, an excellent reply to a contestant may be along the lines used by a large magazine, as follows:

Dear Friend:
The editors of ——— thank you for your personal interest in ———, evinced by your contribution. Your letter will receive earnest and friendly consideration, and you will shortly be notified of the decision of the judges.
The editors cordially invite you to write letters concerning the other articles that appear in ——— from time to time.

Although such a letter is sterotyped, it loses none of its downright friendliness when received by a contest-letter contributor.—C. M. L.

As a circulation promotion stunt obtain half-a-dozen portraits, block out the features and reproduce them in the paper, offering prizes to readers who can show that the missing face is theirs. News of the World, London, did this on a big scale.—G. F. Wilkinson, London.

Many insurance companies get out monthly lists showing how salesmen in various sections rank. Every time that an insurance salesman in your city makes a fine showing on the list of his company he should use advertising space in your paper to tell about it. Keep in touch with the local insurance agents and get advertising from them when they do make such good showings.—F. H. W.

DAILY HIRES SPECIAL TRAIN

50 Freight Cars of Newsprint Pushed Through Embargo for Miami Herald

A special train of 50 cars was required to move a consignment of more than 1,000 tons of newsprint from the Baltimore docks to Miami, Fla., for use by the Miami Herald.

The consignment, representing several regular shipments from a Canadian mill, had been held up by the Florida freight embargo and by the partial blocade of Miami harbor. Threatened by a paper shortage, President Frank B. Shutts of the Herald, arranged with the Seaboard Air Line and the Florida East Coast railroads to rush the solid train through on special schedule at a cost of nearly $40,000.

THE classified section of the city directory offers a source of tips for stories for the industrial or manufacturing page editor that is often overlooked. A careful perusal of the lists of businesses will furnish many little known industries that are often of an unusual nature.—A. N.

For the past two ytars or more nearly every one has demanded a let up in law-making, saying that many we now have should be repealed. I can think of no more stimulating feature for a newspaper at this time than a public discussion on the subject. Why not offer a small prize for the best letters. Ask which laws are "In the way."—Fred L. W. Bennett.

Weeklies and dailies published in the smaller cities can add a department to their papers by getting in touch with their town's "colony" in the principal large city in their respective territories. Thus the doings of former residents in the metropolis may be chronicled in the home paper. Most of these are young people and as a rule keep close tabs on each other. Marriages and promotions in business will be found to be among the principal newsevents. This department might be labeled "The City's Echo."—Gilbert W. Garvin.

Timely interviews on live topics can be obtained in even the smaller towns by having a reporter visit the leading hotels in search of men from communities looming up in news items. If St. Louis men are involved in a liquor scandal, interview a man from St. Louis on liquor conditions there. If oysters are high priced, ask a man from Baltimore what is the cause. If Los Angeles is being accused of movie scandals, interview a man from there. Traveling men, you will find, are well informed and they can generally be found at the dinner hour.—R. C. Schroeder.

A Texas afternoon newspaper runs an "Our Dog" column which is proving quite a hit with the patrons. In the city where the paper is located there are about 6000 dog owners, most of them of the type of people who subscribe for a newspaper. The column is edited by a canine enthusiast of the city, who does it free of charge. It serves as a means of disseminating information about dogs, and also has a "Q and A" column for matters pertaining to dog culture. Nearly all papers have a radio column; few have a "dog" column.—Jack Hawkins.

There are many people in a large city who see the fire trucks on a call but very seldom know where the conflagration is, if it happens to be but a small fire. To counteract this, the Milwaukee Leader, under the head "Fire Alarms" tells the location of fire, what burned, and the cause and time.—Wilbur Polson, Milwaukee.

Funny things that first grade public school pupils have said is the subject of a new daily series which is of especial human interest, now running in the Worcester (Mass.) Post. The quips have been obtained from the teachers themselves, and the fact that the bright sayings are localized has made for much reader interest.—R.B.S.

The Fresno Republican is asking ministers of that city the question, "What is your most helpful hymn?" Their answers together with a reproduction of the music and words of the favorite hymns, are published on the editorial page.—L. C. P.

NEWSPAPER INFLUENCE IN

THE SOUTH

IS A REAL SELLING FORCE

The South is steadfastly American and the Southern home is a dominant institution because the people are reared under the inspiration of the sanctities of the home circle.

Of the rich, deep traditions of the South, the lethargy has been shaken off. There is a new South today—an onward driving, pulsating South in industry, agriculture and finance.

Fundamentally, successful industries develop best where abundant raw materials, mechanical power and stable population combine. Tremendously rich in natural resources, power and raw materials, the South has taken forward stride with seven-league boots and today the economic advantages resulting from the development of her resources are leading the trail of industry Southward.

This is true not only in the textile field, where advantageous conditions of power, climate, labor and living conditions at the source of raw materials have already transferred the center of industry from another great industrial center to the South, but in other lines of diversified manufacturing as well.

The South is the most inviting territory for the distribution of merchandise just because of its industrial advancement and ideal home conditions.

The daily newspapers of the South are a powerful influence in the Southern home and constitute the most valuable selling force for the National Advertiser.

WORKS not Words.

Not mere volume of words has placed a few successful newspapers in the twenty-million linage class, or others in the group printing more than ten million lines annually.

Not mere volume of words has won the place for Consolidated Press writers in those successful papers.

You will find C. P. A. writers in the dominating papers of all the way from ten-thousand circulation to a half-million daily.

You will find these distinctive dispatches in papers whose copy desks winnow C. P. A. from a grist of hundreds of thousands of words from half a dozen wires.

You will find them in complete and successful newspapers in which C. P. A. supplements a single spot news wire.

Like the papers they serve, they are selected; the writers selected from their professional competitors; their terse and authoritative dispatches selected from the mass of copy that pours over the desks.

By their works they are known: authoritative, distinctive, interpretative dispatches, essential to the complete newspaper, and for only one newspaper in each city.

Balsam-Wool TRADE MARK write

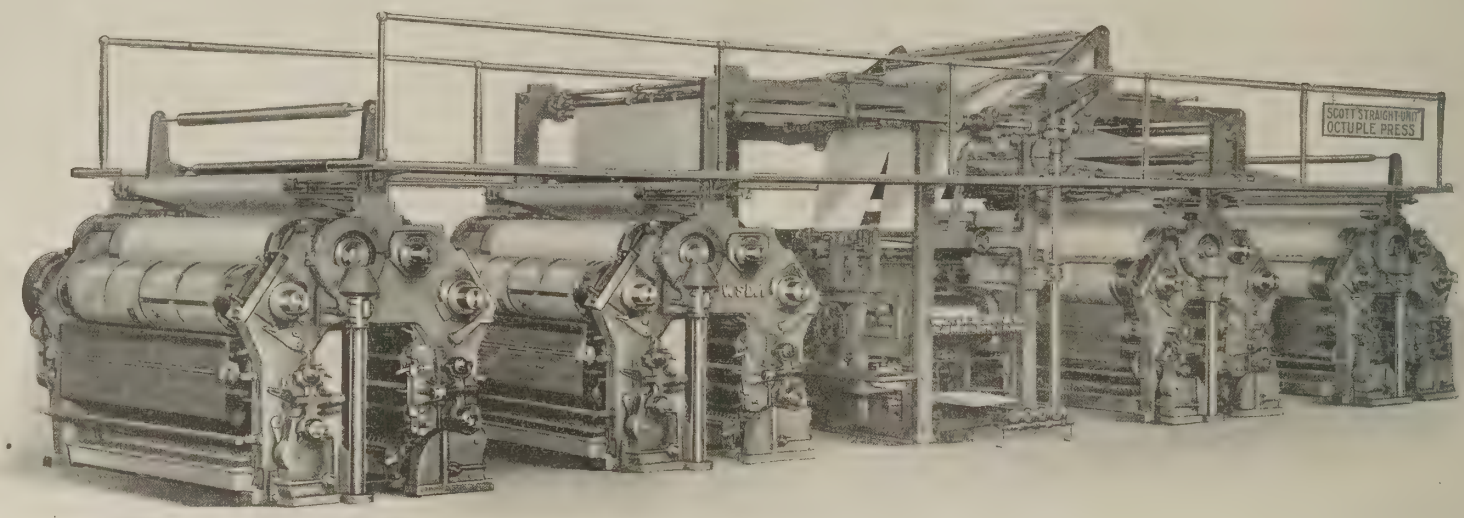
"You will probably be interested to know that we are planning to renew our contract with The Chicago Daily News for our 1926 advertising campaign in this territory.

"Our volume of BALSAM-WOOL sales in Chicago this year has been more than double that of 1924, and this year (1925) our advertising appeared exclusively in The Daily News. We do not, of course, attribute all this increase to The Daily News advertising, as our product, our sales efforts and all the other elements of sound business played their great part. However, fully realizing that advertising is a big factor in successful business building, we intend to use next year the same medium—The Daily News—which has certainly delivered the goods.



"We sincerely appreciate the splendid co-operation and service your staff has given us this past year."

This contains a suggestion for other manufacturers of building materials and allied products who are after maximum sales in Chicago and a maximum return from their advertising.

How're Things in Baltimore?

¶ Ask Montgomery-Ward! Last spring they built in Baltimore. A big distributing plant for their mail-order business in the East. And a big retail store.

¶ Located in a part of Baltimore about as inaccessible as it could be. Far away from shopping centers—served by only a few street-car lines.

¶ But now the plans are drawn for an immense addition to their retail selling space. Business is good in Baltimore—emphatically good—and Montgomery-Ward can tell you so.

¶ Since the opening of their store, Montgomery-Ward have advertised consistently and regularly in the Sunpapers. Modesty forbids that we take too much credit—but, unless you know Baltimore well, it would be hard to realize how far from any shopping district and normal routes of travel the Montgomery-Ward store is.

¶ "Things" are good in Baltimore—and one of the best things is the complete coverage provided by the Sunpapers.

The Philadelphia Bulletin's Progress

Among all of the newspaper developments in the United States during the last thirty years none stands out as conspicuously for sheer merit of legitimate performance like that of the Philadelphia Bulletin.

Starting in 1895 with 6,317 circulation the Bulletin has grown to a sale of 524,662 a day without resort to any other device than the printing of the best newspaper that could be turned out. Here is the table of progress:

1895	6,317	1911	253,565
1897	59,281	1913	291,868
1898	113,973	1914	326,714
1899	112,970	1915	356,531
1900	124,855	1916	402,644
1901	130,084	1917	*367,766
1902	130,439	1918	430,614
1903	144,375	1919	448,126
1904	182,904	1920	488,687
1905	211,134	1921	494,629
1906	222,480	1922	493,240
1907	241,400	1923	505,035
1908	240,797	1924	518,357
1909	249,811	1925	524,662
1910	244,063

* Price advanced to 2c a copy.

The Philadelphia Bulletin stands as the shining example of the fact that it is not necessary to use sensational headlines, and colored printing to sell a meritorious product to the American public.

It provides practically one hundred per cent cover of the homes in its city, does not seek sales outside the legitimate local trading market, and sells its advertising at the lowest rate per line per thousand of unduplicated circulation in the world.

While certain of the other big sellers of the day seek to put over an inferior product by forced draught methods, the Bulletin goes quietly on its way to greater and more worth while achievement strictly on lines of accuracy, sanity, and sound service.

Daily Report of Government's Activities In New Newspaper at Washington

No Local News, Editorials or Interpretative Comments in United States Daily, to Be Issued March 4th Under Ownership and Management of David Lawrence

PLANS for a new daily newspaper, national in scope, were announced this week at Washington by David Lawrence, noted Washington correspondent and president of the Consolidated Press Association and Current News Features, Inc. The newspaper, to be called The United States Daily, will be printed in Washington, and will concern itself, not with the local news of the capital, but with the activities of Government officers and departments. It will contain no editorials or interpretative articles on headlines. It will give a daily account of affairs of the White House, of Congress, and of the several departments and bureaus. Particular attention will be paid to the fiscal side of the Government, it is stated, so that all available facts will be published to throw light upon the methods by which government funds are expended and the purposes of the expenditures.

The new newspaper will be unique in that space considerations as they govern the use of copy by the daily press will be non-existent, and also because its entire staff of more than thirty reporters will concern itself only with writing statements of fact. There will be no supposition, presumption, forecasts or surmises in the columns of the new paper. As an evidence of the completeness that will characterize the paper, Mr. Lawrence chose a hypothetical example, saying:

"Supposing Mr. Mellon, the Secretary of the Treasury, issues a 10,000 word statement explaining the tax bill. Admittedly few, if any, newspapers would be able to publish the statement in full, nor is it conceivable that any of the existing news agencies would transmit it in full. General news, on the day Mr. Mellon issued his statement, might be of such importance that his statement would have to be abbreveated or condensed so far as the newspapers generally were concerned. The United States Daily, however, will not be interested in general news, but it will number among its readers enough persons sufficiently interested in taxes to warrant its publishing the text of Mr. Mellon's statement completely. And this same rule will hold for all other important government announcements or documents. Our field is the Federal Government and we are going to cover that alone."

Mr. Lawrence will be president and editor of the corporation, which is chartered in Delaware with an authorized capitalization of $1,000,000. He will hold a majority of the common stock and will also be the largest individual holder of preferred stock. Associated with him as founders of the enterprise are forty-eight noted men and women from the different states of the Union. Among them are former cabinet officers, persons high in diplomatic life, and other national figures, representative of all political parties and political faiths, and many lines of finance and commerce. Their names will be announced later.

Mr. Lawrence will not write for the new paper, but will act solely in a managerial capacity, and his connection with it will not cause any changes in the operations of the Consolidated Press. Mr. Lawrence will continue to write daily, as he has done for many years, his regular Washington dispatch for the more than 160 daily newspapers in the United States and Canada that receive it.

The United States Daily, which will issue its first number on March 4th, will sell for five cents a copy or $15 a year. According to its prospectus, its appeal will be directed to manufacturers of all kinds, large mercantile establishments, importers and exporters, lawyers and engineers, banks and financial institutions, railroads, large shippers, traffic officials, chambers of commerce, people wishing to sell supplies to the government, statisticians, economists, schools and colleges, libraries and other agencies and individuals interested in obtaining a daily detailed record of the government's activities.

Advertising, for which a minimum of 50 cents a line will be charged, will be accepted from financial houses engaged in national advertising, steamship companies, firms selling merchandise and equipment to Government bureaus, railroads, hotels, national trade associations and others desiring to place their viewpoint before the class circulation which this publication will have.

The paper will be seven columns wide and will be printed on stock slightly better than ordinary newsprint. It will be illustrated occasionally. Size will depend upon the flow of news, but will average about 16 pages.

Machinery has been ordered for a complete newspaper plant and is being installed in the building leased by the corporation at 22nd and M streets, N. W., Washington. The publication will be printed on a Goss sextuple press, with Cline full automatic motive equipment. The stereotype plant is entirely new and of the most modern type. The composing room includes a battery of 14 Mergenthaler linotypes, one model 14, two multiple magazine model 8s, and eleven single magazine 8s; complet Ludlow and Elrod equipment, Miller saws, all steel makeup tables and furniture as well as other accessories for a complete plant.

The paper will go to press about 6 p. m. every night, except Sunday and certain legal holidays, and will be delivered early each morning in Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York and Pittsburgh and other cities in the East.

Besides Mr. Lawrence, the management will include an executive staff, as follows:

Publisher, Jay Jerome Williams; general manager, John E. Rice; director of advertising, Victor Whitlock; treasurer, James L. Bray; managing editor, Homer J. Dodge; foreign editor, Drew Pearson, and chief of the capitol staff, Donald Craig. Mr. Williams was formerly with the Bell Syndicate and prior to that he was associated with Mr. Lawrence in the development of the Consolidated Press Association. Mr. Rice was formerly general manager of the Washington Herald. Mr. Whitlock, up to this week, has been the successful director of advertising for the Nation's Business. Mr. Bray has been associated with Mr. Lawrence in the Consolidated Press Association for many years. Mr. Dodge has been head of the Federal Trade Information Service and a Washington correspondent. Mr. Pearson has specialized in writing national and international articles for the United Publishers' Commercial News Service and Mr. Craig was the former head of the Washington bureau of the New York Hearld.

The United States Daily will contain no editorial page or opinion of any kind whatsoever. There will be no interpretative articles or comments. The aim, according to Mr. Lawrence, is to have all articles without bias so they simply will be correct statements of fact.

When occasion warrants, all important documents in the relations between the United States and foreign governments, and the relations between foreign governments, will be published. Attention will also be given to data covering international conferences, proceedings of the League of Nations and its subsidiary conferences, together with other international conferences which are of special interest to students of international affairs.

About 30 ment will be detailed to covering Washington for "domestic news," according to Mr. Lawrence, who plans to assign, as regular beats, bureaus and other activities which are generally ignored by the daily press. A brief outline of the new paper's editorial program, as furnished by Mr. Lawrence, follows:

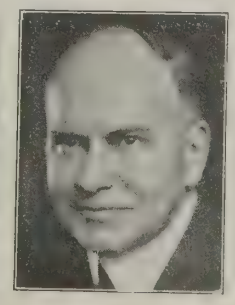
1. Every caller at the White House will be interviewed. Reports of various agencies such as the Tariff Commission will be carried as fully as possible. Routine announcements will be printed in full. All Presidential appointments will be published.

2. One man will devote all his time to the State Department, making complete notes on privileged material obtained at the daily conference with the Secretary. This reporter and the man assigned to the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce will seek to obtain commercial news, not now printed, from the divisions of Far Eastern Affairs, Western European Affairs, Near Eastern Affairs, Eastern European Affairs, Latin American Affairs and Mexican Affairs, and should also obtain many names and considerable news from the division of passport control and the visa office. The division of political and economice information, the consular service and the diplomatic bureau will also be covered, not only for occasional statements, but also for news that can be obtained only by digging.

3. At least one man, possibly two or three, will be assigned to the Treasury Department. The Federal Reserve Board and the Comptroller of the Currency furnish daily a great volume of news of interest to 30,000 banking houses and the Reserve Board should produce not less than two columns daily. One man will be assigned to the Bureau of the Budget and the Co-ordinating Offices, which constitute "a mine of news hitherto unpublished." The Bureau of Internal Revenue will have assigned a man specially trained in reporting tax news, not only for printed announcements and rulings, but for a considerable volume of news now unpublished which can be found only by investigation. This reporter will also cover the Board of Tax Appeals, now, according to Mr. Lawrence, virtually uncovered by the newspapers. The General Supply Committee will keep one man busy for two months each year.

Others scheduled for the regular calling-list are the Federal Farm Loan Board, the Director of the Mint, the War Finance Corporation, the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Public Health Service, the Comptroller General, the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, the Coast Guard, the Bureau of Supply and the office of the Superintending Architect. The Secretary of the Treasury, it is pointed out, is also chairman of the Debt Funding Commission and of the United States Section of the Inter-American High Commission, and an occasional source of news in both capacities.

DAVID LAWRENCE



JAY JEROME WILLIAMS

DREW PEARSON

JOHN E. RICE

VICTOR WHITLOCK

The Prohibition Unit will be covered for developments of interest to manufacturers and users of industrial alcohol.

4. One man will be assigned to each of the military departments—War and Navy, giving special attention to the financial phases of their work, and reports pertaining to aviation, health service, etc.

5. Original research rather than dependence upon handouts is the watchword for the man assigned to the Department of Justice and the office of the Alien Property Custodian.

6. One man will be detailed to the Post Office Department, covering the information now issued daily by the department's bulletin, the department's purchases, the dead letter office and the division of foreign mails.

7. Two men are to cover the manifold activities of the Department of the Interior. Considerable attention will be given to the weekly and monthly statistical reports on coal and petroleum, and other periodical information.

8. Two or three men will also be assigned to the Department of Agriculture. Purely agricultural news will not be the main objective of these reporters, who will give most of their time to the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, the Bureau of Home Economics, the department's press service and the crop reporting division. The Weather Bureau, it is believed, will furnish two to three columns daily of general interest to manufacturers and other commercial interests. Close attention will also be accorded the Forest Service, the Bureau of Chemistry, the Bureau of Public Roads, the Bureau of Soils, the Bureau of Animal Industry and Plant Industry, the Grain Futures Administration, the Packers and Stockyards Administration, and the Office of the Secretary.

9. Three men will be on regular duty at the Department of Commerce. One man will be stationed full time at the Bureau of Standards, and another full-time man at the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. The third man will cover the Bureau of the Census and other offices. This department, it is expected, will yield not less than a page and a half of copy a day. The Patent Office will be covered closely for information as to patents and trade-marks granted, together with a list of the chief patents expiring each day. The latter is an untouched news field.

10. One man will cover both the Department of Labor and the Federal Trade Commission.

11. A reporter and an assistant, as well as several women, will be kept busy at the Interstate Commerce Commission, which is expected to yield at least half a page of copy a day. A complete list of rate changes will be published daily.

12. One man will be detailed to the Supreme Court when it is in session. He would be called upon to furnish the complete text of every decision, summaries of all briefs, a daily story of all cases argued before the court and summaries of all cases filed with the court. He will be assisted by an expert stenographer on decision days. The Court of Customs Appeals will also be covered carefully.

13. The Navy Department man will also cover the Emergency Fleet Corporation and the Shipping Board, which furnishes news of considerable information and values to shipping interests.

14. Two or three men will be assigned to the various independent offices, including the Railroad Administration, Veterans' Bureau, Civil Service Commission, Mixed Claims Commission, Tariff Commission, Board for Vocational Education, Fine Arts Commission, Narcotics Control Board and Court of Claims.

15. Six or eight men will cover Congress when it is in session. Committee activities are to be covered thoroughly and the progress of legislation day by day will be noted, as well as the details of committee hearings.

"There is a distinct need for a publication of this character not only from an educational but from a commercial standpoint," Mr. Lawrence said to EDITOR & PUBLISHER. "Nearly every government in the world has an official gazette, and even in our own case, we issue a bulletin which was published during the war, and demonstrated its value. Poorly done and crudely compiled, the Official Bulletin had 15,000 paid subscribers without soliciting one of them. More than 100,000 copies were printed daily. Most of these were distributed free by the government to its own bureaus and personnel.

"The daily newspapers are unable to give space to all the activities of the Federal Government, and the dispatches that are carried in the newspapers are digested and only rarely give documents or text of data. Many interesting activities of the government are entirely obscured because they are devoid of sensation. The Government itself is obliged to print countless pamphlets and bulletins for lack of any medium in which to publish the information. Even the Associated Press, which covers Washington more comprehensively than any other news agency, can not give more than 10,000 words a day of the activities of the entire government and gauges its work on what is interesting to the mass reader and not the special classes. Some of the most valuable data to the class reader is thus necessarily excluded and is obtained only by subscribing to special services at a great cost or by individual effort. The United States Daily will be so complete that it will be kept for reference. A certain number of copies will be set aside daily to be bound quarterly.

"When the reading public discovers that there is no motive behind the United States Daily except to give information and facts and that it is neither a means of boosting or knocking an administration in power, the publication will appeal to the readers of all political faiths. Of particular value will the publication be to editorial writers on American newspapers, and others in the publishing world who shape opinion, but who can not readily obtain the facts of our government. In recent years the Federal Government has grown so large that The United States Daily will astonish even the newspapers, for it has never been possible to obtain a comprehensive picture of the government in action. The publication itself will have the co-operation of the President and the members of the Cabinet under the present as well as future administrations, for the usual complaint of the government official is that the newspapers do not pay attention to important activities of the government unless they are dramatic or sensational, or interest immediately a large number of the readers. Some of the most interesting pieces of research are being conducted by the Government and are of vital interest to the country at large, though the number directly interested may be in some instances quite limited.

"This publication should be of immense value to other governments of the world giving them not only important information about the activities of our government, but stimulating in them, let us hope, a spirit of publicity with respect to governmental action, thus making for intelligent public opinion and reducing the area of mischief in which misinterpretations and false information are cultivated.

"Particular attention will be given to the fiscal side of the government, throwing light upon the methods by which government funds are expended and the purposes for which they are expended, thus presenting an important check on the annual budget and enabling members of Congress to study and understand problems relating to the fiscal side of the government and appropriations generally.

"By publishing a complete record of the proceedings of the various committees individual members of Congress will be able to keep track of important questions of special interest to their constituents and many of the latter by subscribing to the United States Daily will in turn save the time of their representatives in Congress by securing from the United States Daily much of the information that now absorbs the meager clerical force of members of Congress.

"A space on the lower half of the first page, perhaps about six columns wide, will be devoted to a daily index of the contents of the paper. In this index, we will list all the various groups, as well as the various subjects, so that a man interested in motors, or in taxes, or in building materials for instance will be able to find quickly anything of interest to him in the paper.

"The index will be made daily, weekly, as well as monthly and yearly. We shall also carry in a separate article daily, a half column or more, indexing the Congressional Record while Congress is in session.

"In make-up, the United States Daily will apply the test of importance rather than sensation. The first three or four pages will be devoted to stories which interest the maximum number of readers. As we go toward the back pages, the subjects which are of interest to the smaller groups will be placed. Statistical material and purely routine orders and announcements will be in the back pages very much as are the financial statistics and tabular matter in an ordinary newspaper. We shall put our cuts and illustrations on the first few pages so as to make the appearance attractive. Very frequently, we shall have drawings and charts, occasionally maps, so as to illustrate points involved in treaties and international agreements."

LONDON ADVERTISER SOLD

Mackay Buys Control from Atkinson—Adams and Rossie in Charge

TORONTO, Ont., Feb. 17.—The London Advertiser, recently controlled by J. E. Atkinson, publisher of the Toronto Star, has been sold to a new company headed by J. F. Mackay, former business manager of the Toronto Globe. Frank Adams, formerly general manager and secretary-treasurer, resumes these positions, and Melville W. Rossie, who was managing editor some years ago and recently returned as night editor takes editorial control.

J. F. MACKAY

Mr. Mackay, who has been for some time engaged in a financial agency business in Toronto, will not be active in the management of the paper.

INSURANCE MEN ACTIVE

Advertising Group Making Philadelphia Convention Plans

Clifford Elvins, Imperial Life Assurance Company, Toronto, has been appointed general chairman of the committee planning for the convention of the Insurance Advertising Conference to be held in Philadelphia next June in conjunction with the annual gathering of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World. The appointment was made by Edward A. Collins, assistant secretary of the National Surety Company, New York, and conference president.

Other committee members are: Clarence A. Palmer, Insurance Company of North America; Philadelphia, John W. Longnecker, Hartford Fire Insurance Company, Hartford; Nelson A. White, Provident Mutual Life Insurance Company, Philadelphia; B. N. Mills, Bankers' Life Insurance Company, Des Moines; Harry A. Warner, Maryland Casualty Company, Baltimore; and Sidney C. Doolittle, Fidelity & Deposit Company, Baltimore. Mr. Elvins has selected John W. Longnecker to lead the Fire Group Session and Sidney C. Doolittle to lead the Casualty and Surety Group.

Republican Group Reelects Dickey

Walter S. Dickey, owner and editor of the Kansas City Journal-Post, was reelected president of the Republican Editorial Association of Missouri, at the annual meeting in Springfield, Feb. 13. Fred Harrison, Gallatin, was elected general vice-president; D. C. Simons of the Granite City Tribune was reelected recording secretary and Charles W. Fear of Jefferson City, was reelected secretary-treasurer.

TWO TEXANS TO RUN N. Y. TELEGRAPH

E. S. Fentress and C. E. Marsh, Owners of 6 Newspapers in Southwest Managing Property—Thomas Retains Ownership

E. S. Fentress, president, and Charles E. Marsh, editor-in-chief of the Fentress-Marsh newspapers of Texas, have taken over the management of the New York Morning Telegraph, it was announced this week. They have no financial interest in the property, however, E. R. Thomas, the owner and publisher, still retaining control.

CHARLES E. MARSH

Mr. Thomas, it was stated, is in ill health and at present is in Florida. He has made an agreement with Mr. Fentress and Mr. Marsh to manage the Telegraph.

Mr. Marsh and Mr. Fentress will alternate as Mr. Thomas's representative in New York. Mr. Marsh is in charge.

The Fentress-Marsh newspapers, operated as individual corporations, consist of six newspapers, the Wichita Falls Record-News, the Waco News-Tribune, the Austin American, the Austin Statesman, the Port Arthur News and the Orange Leader.

Staff changes on the Telegraph which have so far resulted under the Fentress-Marsh management include the transfer of Hugh Kent, managing editor, to Washington, and the promotion of A. Bornefeld, to business and advertising manager, succeeding C. G. Snyder, resigned. Mr. Marsh is filling the position of managing editor.

E. S. FENTRESS

The Telegraph will continue as a theatrical and sporting daily, Mr. Bornefeld informed EDITOR & PUBLISHER. Efforts are being made to strengthen all news departments, with special attention being paid to turf. Some important changes are contemplated, he said.

Fentress was born in Kansas, 49 years ago, obtained his paper experience in a combined newspaper and job plant in Norwalk, O. He started the Oklahoma News for the Scripps organization and later became business manager of the Des Moines News.

Marsh was born in Cincinnati, 38 years ago, obtained his first newsppaer work on the Oklahoma News, a Scripps newspaper. He was city editor of the Cleveland Press and managing editor of the Cincinnati Post and joined with Fentress in the partnership while he was editor of the Des Moines News.

DEAL IN ROCHESTER

Local Announcement Indicates Democrat & Chronicle Will Buy Herald

An advertisement appearing in Rochester, N. Y., newspapers Feb. 16 indicated that the Rochester Printing Company, which publishes the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle, has entered into a contract with the receivers of the Rochester Herald Company to buy the plant and the assets of the Rochester Herald.

The sale is subject to the outcome of an order to show cause in Federal court at Buffalo on Feb. 23 why the property should not be sold at public auction, and why the contract with the Rochester Printing Company should not be approved.

EDITOR POLLARD CLEARED OF CONTEMPT CHARGE

With Charles Evans Hughes as Defense Lawyer, New York Evening World Man is Acquitted by Justice Levy—Press Has Traditional Rights to Criticize Courts, Hughes Maintains

"I WILL yield to no one in the desire to see the administration of justice maintained. but it cannot be maintained by an arbitrary action in a proceeding for criminal contempt. If a man in a newspaper office, fairly, and on facts which he got from the highest source, criticizes a Judge for his decision—he thinks it is not right, the Judge thinks it is right—how does the Judge tell? This is a free country. He cannot be examined by a Judge who is both Judge and jury himself and be put under a criminal sentence in a case of this sort if he has acted fairly."

CHARLES E. HUGHES

Charles Evans Hughes made this declaration this week on one of the few occasions he raised his precise voice while defending Harold Stanley Pollard, editor of the New York Evening World, charged with criminal contempt of court, in Justice Levy's chambers Feb. 16, in New York.

Supreme Court Justice Aaron J. Levy, who brought the charge, acquitted the editor and shook his hand.

Before deciding for acquittal the court had argued his charge did not represent "an attempt to throttle the freedom of the press."

Justice Levy had alleged that three editorials written by Mr. Pollard for the Evening World on "Easy Bail" had constituted a "false or grossly inaccurate report" of judicial proceedings before him.

The hearing before Justice Levy was devoid of verbal fireworks. Mr. Hughes went into action calmly and without bluster. On only two occasions did he lean forward and speak with anything but the usual persuasive legal tone. Then it was to speak as he was quoted above, and again to say, in definition of the word "report":

"If all comment or criticism is to be drawn in under this word then that's an end to all civil liberty."

Mr. Pollard in the editorials complained of had asserted that Justice Levy had reduced the bail of two criminals with bad records. A certain bail had been set by Judge Mulqueen in General Sessions, Pollard had written, and the amount had been lowered by Justice Levy when the defendants and their lawyers had appeared before him later on habeas corpus proceedings.

It was brought out in testimony that Mr. Pollard had obtained the information which formed the basis of his editorials from news stories published in the Evening World, and also from District Attorney Joab Banton, who had been interviewed by R. R. Batson, a member of the newspaper's staff. Mr. Banton, testimony showed, had confused the names of the two criminals concerned.

In an editorial printed Sept. 28, Mr. Pollard had written that bail was set at $50,000 by Judge Mulqueen in General Sessions in the case of Herman Rothenberg, an alleged second offender indicted on a burglary charge, and Justice Levy had ordered it reduced to $10,000. On Oct. 20 in another editorial Mr. Pollard had stated that Judge Mulqueen had ordered Rothenberg held without bail. The difference was explained in testimony as due to the fact that Judge Mulqueen had not initialed the Rothenberg bail order, which set the bail at $50,000.

Mr. Pollard in his reply read to the court by Mr. Hughes testified he wrote the editorials complained of with the sole purpose and intention of "making therein fair and appropriate criticism and comment on a question of great public interest and importance" and not with the intent or purpose of publishing a report which could be described as false or grossly inaccurate.

Mr. Hughes opened the proceedings by submitting a motion to dismiss the citation.

Justice Levy denied the motion to dismiss. Then he took up an editorial, "Shopping for Bail," which appeared Sept. 28, read extracts from it and commented on the extracts. He maintained that the title was false because the right of habeas corpus is constitutional and a Justice refusing to grant it is subject to a penalty of $1,000.

Justice Levy read extracts from two other editorials entitled "Easy Bail" and "Bargain Counter Bail" and characterized them as not only false and inaccurate but calculated to offend the dignity of the Supreme Court.

R. R. Batson and Robert R. Wilkes, Evening World reporters, were called by Mr. Hughes and testified to conversations with District Attorney Banton upon which were based news articles relating to the manner in which bail fixed in the Court of General Sessions was reduced in the Supreme Court in cases of criminals with records. Mr. Batson testified that District Attorney Banton criticized the practice. The resultant news articles furnished the basis for Mr. Pollard's editorials. Mr. Banton, the witness said, confused the names of two men, thinking one of the names was an alias and in that way furnished some of the basis for the criticism later offered by Justice Levy.

Mr. Pollard then took the witness chair. He testified he was a graduate of Harvard University, '02, and had been connected with the World 20 years, including the time he served as secretary to the elder Joseph Pulitzer. He said he had been editor of the Evening World six years.

"Did you intend to reflect on the character and honor and integrity of Justice Levy?" asked Mr. Hughes.

"I did not," Mr. Pollard replied.

Mr. Hughes then offered the records of the two criminals in evidence and Justice Levy received them.

"Now, if Your Honor please," said Mr. Hughes, "it is our position that so far as these articles constitute comment and assertions upon the practice and disposition of matters, they are within the right of one acting in good faith on the ground that action taken is subject to criticism by the press and by editors, although it is of a judicial character. We find only one item which can be regarded as inaccurate in these reports, so far as they relate to the actual proceedings before Your Honor, and that is the reference to the presentation by the District Attorney to Your Honor of the criminal records of the defendants whose cases were referred to.

"Of course it is our wish to express, on Mr. Pollard's behalf, his regret that he should have fallen into that inaccuracy, although it was a very natural one, as he was informed by the District Attorney they had been so presented. Also he gave credence to that because he assumed that the Judge reducing bail would have the criminal record of the defendant furnished by the District Attorney.

"Apart from that we think the record cannot be regarded as inaccurate, and, taken as a whole, even with the matter about which Mr. Pollard was misinformed by the District Attorney."

Mr. Hughes, after informing Justice Levy, in response to a question, that there would be no further evidence offered, said:

"The fact that Mr. Pollard was advised that Your Honor did have the criminal record before you is sufficient from the standpoint of his judgment and attitude and purpose to justify criticism, because he had a right to deal with that. Now, he was not to blame. He went to the highest possible source to ascertain the fact.

"Now I quite appreciate the fact that Your Honor did not know it, but standing here representing a man accused of crime, accused of criminal conduct, I am bound to suggest to Your Honor that it was perfectly competent for him to assume, and very naturally to assume, that Your Honor would never have reduced bail in either of those cases without insisting that the District Attorney should produce that record; and there was much more severe criticism that could be made on Your Honor's action in dealing with them, without knowing the defendants' records, so I say this is not a false or grossly inaccurate report, when you consider the thing in its whole aspect.

"I have had my share of it in my own walk of life, and we are all partners before the public in sharing criticism of official action.

"Now, I submit to Your Honor, you of course have no desire except to promote the administration of justice, and we are here indicating that this is a kind of case where a man's good faith, rectitude of purpose and right to criticize should be just as much recognized by Your Honor as Your Honor's right to have a report of a proceeding not false or grossly inaccurate."

"I am fearful you are proceeding on a false hypothesis," interrupted Justice Levy. "You are assuming in the presentation of this argument that the respondent, or those acting in his behalf, sought out from the highest authority verification of the facts.

"I cannot accept that view at all. I do not regard the District Attorney of this or any other county as the highest authority; the District Attorney is no more than any other counsel, except that he represents the people, he is the attorney for the people, and he is the counsel naturally interested in the causes he has in charge, and I contend going to the District Attorney was not, therefore, going to the highest authority.

"That is the difficulty, and therefore while I do not mind saying to you very frankly I am prepared to believe what Mr. Pollard says and what Mr. Batson has said—I am confident they are both telling the truth—the fact nevertheless remains that they did not approach this situation as I view it."

Justice Levy then referred at some length to Mr. Pollard's failure to accept his invitation to come over to his chambers after the publication of the first editorial complained of, stating that if such invitation had been accepted the contempt proceedings could have been avoided.

Then, with reference to the situation at the time bail was reduced in the cases before him, Justice Levy said that all that the District Attorney's representative said to him at that time was:

"Mr. Banton wants this bail held as it is."

"Now," went on Justice Levy, "I am only interested to the extent of maintaining the dignity of the court. I have no feelings in this matter whatever, and I know you are, too, as anxious as I am to bring about that very result. It is an impersonal situation."

Mr. Pollard then told the court he had not acceded to Justice Levy's original request because he believed it to be a "very grave question if the editor of a newspaper could be summoned in just that way" to answer for his writings.

There followed a mutual exchange of explanations as to the misunderstandings which had arisen, Mr. Hughes taking part and explaining that the manner in which Justice Levy's secretary perhaps had requested Mr. Pollard to come to the jurist's chambers was partly responsible. Then Justice Levy announced:

"The court acquits the respondent."

"I want you to know this, Mr. Pollard," the Justice then added, "you have given me no small measure of pain in this matter and I am very sorry for it. I recognize the honesty of your purpose; and I recognize the earnestness of your labors, and I recognize you are laboring in a cause that is very, very important to the public welfare."

Plasterers and electricians stopped to watch the camera when this picture was taken but reporters kept right on at their typewriters. It was near edition time in the editorial room of the New Bedford (Mass.) Standard. While ten feet was being cut off of the Standard building to widen a street and a new front put on the building, newspaper-making has gone on under difficulties, illustrated in this picture of one end of the news room.

REALIZATION OF HAINES' PRESS CITY DREAM RESTS WITH NEWSPAPERS

Cooperation of Journalists Everywhere Needed to Make Press Foundation a Practical Force, Maj. Brown, Chairman, Declares—Has Deep Faith in Plan

CURTIS RESIGNS OFFICE

Cyrus H. K. Curtis, proprietor of the Philadelphia Public Ledger and the New York Evening Post, has resigned as second vice-president of the International Press Foundation.

The resignation was sent to Col. Charles D. Haines in a letter signed by John C. Martin, vice-president of the Public Ledger Company.

Mr. Martin wrote:

"Mr. Curtis was very much surprised to learn that he had been elected vice-president of the International Press Foundation without his consent, and he wishes to tender his resignation, effective immediately, and he would ask that you give his resignation the same publicity you gave his unauthorized election."

Other officers elected were: Frank O. Lowden, former governor of Illinois, president; Adolph S. Ochs, publisher of the New York Times, first vice-president, and Senator Arthur Capper, third vice-president.

Mr. Ochs declined this week to state whether he would accept his election.

By MARLEN PEW

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla., Feb. 12.—Maj. Lew B. Brown, editor and publisher of the St. Petersburg Independent, is chairman of the board of directors of the International Press Foundation, the Haines benefaction to journalism, and believes that the aged railroad builder's dream of a Press City, functioning for newspaper men and serving their idealism, may be substantially realized.

MAJOR LEW B. BROWN

"It may be something very great and useful or nothing at all, according to the vision and co-operative spirit of those to whom its destiny has been entrusted," said the Florida editor who is one of its most respected newspaper men, to EDITOR & PUBLISHER today.

Major Brown told in detail of his relationship with the Press City project. He has known Col. and Mrs. Haines for years and has interestedly followed their plan. He did not understand that Col. Haines' fortune was immense, but said that he had been successful in many business projects.

"This man I believe to be wholly sincere in this project," Major Brown continued. "It represents his ideal of service. He has selected the press because of his belief in its power. Sometimes it is difficult to credit to any mortal a genuinely altruistic motive, but in this instance I believe we are dealing with such a phenomenon. It is because Col. Haines is not a practised newspaper man, with the added fact that his visions of what is possible seem exaggerated or at least are vague, that his plan has been assailed as representing some personal ambition.

"I entered this enterprise with as much uncertainty as anyone. I was reluctant to take an active part in the convention in this state last week but the newspaper men who came here from 47 states insisted upon it and I accepted the call. From confusion the matter was brought to a practical plan. Col. and Mrs. Haines in the presence of the delegates and without qualification made over to the Foundation ownership of the 1,000 acres at Press City, which may have a potential value of $1,000,000 to $5,000,000, as land values are enhancing in this state; his home at Altamonte Springs, valued at $250,000, with life tenure reserved and $50,000 in cash. Col. Haines has expended a large sum of money on the enterprise to date. He did not propose that the development should cost newspaper men anything.

"The project is now in the hands of its officers and designated committees. Whether it shall amount to a great or a small result is dependent upon them.

"For the sake of argument, assume that the stories are true that Col. Haines in giving these properties has as his motive enhancing adjoining realty held under option by confederates. I have not the slightest proof that this is true and very satisfactory evidence that it is an unjust suspicion. But, if true, the gift is none the less valuable and none the less acceptable to those of us who believe that a movement has been started which may be made a sound beneficence to journalism. These stories seem absurd to me. You would not hesitate to build a fine hotel or hospital on a street because it might improve adjoining property. Every story that I have heard reflecting discredit upon Col. Haines' motives seems absurd to me and the very best proof of his sincerity is that his deeds have in every instance suited his word.

"This man believes that the press is well-nigh omnipotent. He has much greater faith in the potency of the printed word than have most journalists. Upon this faith he has built an elaborate structure of beneficent service to humanity. For instance, he believes that a world-wide peace movement can and will be organized through a federated press seeking this as an idea. That is unquestionably true. We newspaper men, however, are blind to this vision because of well-known practical obstacles. We know how the world's press is constituted. We are conscious of its limitations. We may even regard the Haines' vision as ludicrously fantastic. Yet, it must be conceded that the power to achieve the end of international peace is latent in world journalism, and I, for one am not prepared to say that the day may not come when the journalists of all nations may not catch inspiration from such an organization as the Foundation and bring to fruition the dream of world disarmament on a satisfactory system of arbitrating international disputes.

"Some hard-boiled newspaper men sat in at the recent conference. I will confess that when Col. Haines spoke he appeared like a wild visionary to us all, at first. But gradually, when we got down to earth on the general scheme, we began to understand and appreciate his sincerity and gradually we fell to discussing practical suggestions and plans.

"If Press City becomes nothing greater than a retreat for retiring newspaper men it will serve a noble purpose. If it builds a fine school of journalism it will be worth the effort. If it leads on to a federation of newspaper men it will be worth the effort. If it leads on to a federation of newspaper men of the world and acts as a clearing house for inspirational effort through the printed word, it will be a huge power. All depends upon the depth of feeling and intensity of purpose of those who shall guide its destinies.

"It should be well understood that Col. Haines has merely laid the groundwork for the Foundation. All else must be built, whether cottages for retired journalists, library, university or assembly hall. Where will these funds come from? Well, where have funds come from for other great and small philanthropic and educational causes? Men assemble wealth and as they grow old they wonder what to do with it. They seeks to find worthy objects upon which to bestow it.

"Certainly it is nothing for newspaper men to scoff at. It deserves thoughtful consideration. A finance committee is at work to locate means, or to chart a course. A committee is considering what the immediate objects of the Foundation might well be. The whole plan is in the formative stage and years will be required perhaps to bring it to any practical use.

"In the course of time, I hope not long, the officers will begin to make some definite plans. We shall want the co-operation of newspaper men everywhere. This foundation is world-wide in scope. It is now committed to nothing. Every working journalist is a part of it and its business is his business. I hope that the project will be thoroughly discussed by newspaper men everywhere."

Major Brown is one of the leading newspaper editors of the South, the head of one of Florida's largest and most successful newspapers. He is by no means a visionary. Many of the sensational civic developments of this community are credited to him. He has acquired a fortune in St. Petersburg during the past 17 years and is noted here for hard-headed business acumen and progressive editorial policies. He is one of Florida's citizens who has not plunged into speculative enterprises to gain large wealth.

"Men come here almost every day and ask me to join in ventures that I know will be profitable and I turn them away. They do not understand me when I say that I do not want any more money. My family has enough. I am content with my work on this paper. But I am bound to tell you that I am at present sufficiently impressed by the possibilities of doing worthwhile things through the International Press Foundation to give to it the remaining years of my life, if necessary."

MRS. STILLMAN WAS ADVERTISED TO VICTORY

Famous Divorce Case Presents Study in Mass Psychology—Newspaper Reporters as "Fifi's" Publicity Advisor Helped Sway Anne to Mother's Side

By PHILIP SCHUYLER

"Without the sympathy of the American people and the support of the American press, I would have abandoned the fight early," Mrs. James A. Stillman was quoted as saying last week, following reconciliation with her husband.

How she obtained the public sympathy and press support now becomes known through hitherto untold inside facts of the case, revealed by John K. Winkler, former New York American reporter, now a magazine writer, in this the second of a series of three articles obtained for EDITOR & PUBLISHER.

MRS. ANNE URQUHART STILLMAN, soon after the divorce action against her became public decided that public opinion would win her case, that the mob, therefore, must be swayed to her side. She must turn show woman and hang out her advertising banners. It was a role to which she was unaccustomed, but she was willing to accept it. Millions of dollars for herself and her children were at stake.

In her decision, she was influenced to a great degree by John K. Winkler, then a reporter on the New York American, who, as told in this series last week, became her publicity advisor the day on which his exposé of Mr. James A. Stillman's relations with "Flo" Leeds was published in the Hearst chain of dailies.

Mrs. Stillman had personally telephoned Winkler, reaching him at his home in Forest Hills, L. I. An appointment had been made for 2:30 that afternoon. It was then March of 1921. Neither Mr. nor Mrs. Stillman had given interviews to the press.

Downstairs in the apartment house at 910 Fifth avenue, arrangements had been made to permit Winkler to go straight up to the ninth floor, where Mrs. Stillman's suite was located. She herself opened the door to the newspaper man.

"I have always thought of you newspaper reporters as ogres and bears," she declared, when they had seated themselves. "After I learned that some of you had even climbed the fire-escapes at the Lakewood hotel trying to see me, I became terror stricken. The day after the suit became public, every tree seemed to me to be a newspaper man, and," she added, laughing, "the leaves were cameras."

"You must reconcile yourself to the publicity which will be given this case," Winkler told her.

"You have no more chance of being a private individual for the length of this suit than, let us say, Heinz baked beans or Smith Brothers' cough drops."

"What then should I do?" Mrs. Stillman asked.

"You must be 'personalized' to the American people just as a movie star or a baseball hero is personalized," the reporter replied. "You must become the symbol of dauntless, courageous womanhood battling great wealth for the sake of your good name and your children.

"You see, you are the under-dog in this scrap. You are the lone woman (a beautiful, magnetic woman and that helps a lot!) stripped of her social position, poverty-stricken, comparatively, and you are fighting the most powerful financial group in the world—Stillmans, Rockefellers, Standard Oil, National City Bank etc.

"Why it will be easy to make you the nation's sweetheart!"

"But just how is all this to be done?" asked Mrs. Stillman, still a bit puzzled, though her shining eyes and flushed face showed the idea intrigued her.

"Perfectly simple," explained Winkler. "The Hearst papers are the poor man's Bible. They go into millions of homes every day. They are avid for stories on the Stillman case. My friend and superior, Victor Watson, managing editor of the American, is a whizz-bang on layouts and big splashy newspaper campaigns. If you and I give him the material he'll give us the space.

"I won't be your press agent—I draw a very liberal salary from the Hearst paymaster every Tuesday—but I will be your advisor and your friend. And I think you and I will have lots of fun and Mr. Hearst will sell lots of papers!"

Mrs. Stillman and the newspaper man continued talking through tea and dinner and far into the night. Confidences were exchanged and the campaign against the "might and millions" of Wall street planned.

For months after this conversation, Winkler was the only newspaper reporter received by Mrs. Stillman.

"Immediately," Winkler said, "we began cracking stories on her side. We began fighting money by public sentiment."

A splendid opportunity to realize from this new acquaintances with a newspaper man was afforded Mrs. Stillman almost the very next day. DeLancey Nicoll, Mr. Stillman's attorney made public the story of Fred Beauvais, the Indian guide. A signed story by Winkler appeared in the New York American on the heels of Nicoll's announcement, presenting Mrs. Stillman's version of the Indian guide charge. As told by the lawyer, Mrs. Stillman was alone with Beauvais several days in the Canadian forests. The American's story obtained from Mrs. Stillman by Winkler explained that 17-year "Bud" Stillman had accompanied his mother and the guide. Every affidavit made in court by Mr. Stilman's lawyer, became occasions for subsequent exclusive Winkler "beats."

"We tackled every charge," he said, "disinfected them and made them clean. Pictures were published by the dozen—Mother-love pictures, showing Mrs. Stillman surrounded by her children. Phrenologists, anthropologists, doctors, nurses, 'experts' of every sort analyzed 'Baby Guy'."

For 49 consecutive days the Stillman name was on the American's front page at one time.

Tactics were not always based on defense. Mrs. Stillman assisted in attacks on her husband through the columns of the Hearst press.

Thus, about three months after he had had his first interview with Mrs. Stillman, Winkler wrote what upon publication in the American on, June 4, 1921, became known as the "deadly parallel story."

Mrs. Stillman had told the reporter that when she was a bride at 9 E. 72d street, the Stillman mansion, she had heard her husband speak of his mother. She knew nothing about her mother-in-law and the fact that although the elder Mrs. Stillman was still alive, she never heard of her again, nor saw her, gave her reason to believe there was some secret, which if uncovered, would hurt Mr. Stillman and aid her fight.

Winkler, of course, was interested. By investigation he obtained the address of the mother, Mrs. Sarah Elizabeth Rumrill Stillman. She was living in seclusion at 102 East 35th Street, New York. The reporter was confident she had been warned against talking to newspaper men and it was by a subterfuge, therefore, that Winkler called at the address eventually and obtained her story.

The story was that Mrs. Sarah Stillman had been driven into exile herself by the father of the suing banker. She had suffered banishment to Europe for 25 years—an amazing parallel to what Mr. Stillman, the younger, was then attempting in the case of his wife, Anne Potter.

By talking to the mother and her paid companion, Winkler obtained enough Stillman family history to fill four columns of the American. In an italic lead it was described as "the most dramatic story of human interest in the history of American journalism."

"Even in the dog-eat-dog, knock-'em-down-and-drag-'em-out atmosphere of the battle," remarked Mr. Winkler, "this was one big yarn I didn't particularly enjoy breaking. Later, though, I learned through indirect sources that Mrs. Sarah Stillman had expressed pleasure at her belated vindication and the hope that the publication of her astonishing story had been of service to Mrs. Anne Stillman."

A thorn in the side of this "flaming young brunette," as Winkler describes Mrs. Stillman, and a hindrance to the Hearst crusade in her behalf, was the fact that at this time Anne Stillman, her daughter, now Mrs. Henry P. Davison, openly sided with her father. A very definite campaign was planned to change this state of affairs.

After commencement at the fashionable Westover school, Anne went to Glen Cove, L. I., to visit the Davisons. There all the influence was against Mrs. Stillman and in favor of James A. But, while opposing her mother, she was friendly with her grandfather James Brown Potter of Tuxedo Park, and would occasionally spend week-ends at his estate.

Mr. Potter, a charming, conventional old gentleman, did not at first understand the alliance his daughter had made with Winkler, and through him with the entire Hearst press, shrinking from the screaming headlines and continuous flow of pictures and other publicity propaganda. But by June he began to understand that it was all helping "Fifi" in her fight. Mr. Stillman had been forced from the bank. Clubs were demanding his resignation. Mrs. Stillman, sentimentally, was "riding high."

To Mrs. Stillman and Winkler, her publicity advisor, Mr. Potter became a sort of liason officer between Anne and her mother. The sub-soil ploughing was thus accomplished, which was later to result in Anne's dramatic renunciation of her father.

One story that swayed Anne appeared under Winkler's by-line in the American of June 20, 1921. It was an interview with 17-year-old "Bud" Stillman in which this boy "disowned" his father, and frankly discussed the attitude his sister was taking.

"I don't know much about girls, but I can't understand my sister," "Bud" was quoted as saying. "We'd always been pretty close before this thing came up. Now she's trailing with her father. Girls are queer aren't they? I'm sort of sorry for Sis. She seems to think her father is a lily white angel—isn't it strange?

"Anne goes to Westover School up in Connecticut. I saw her about a month ago. I told her about the truth of these charges against mother, though she didn't want to pay any attention to me.

"I know she's thinking about her 'position' and all that sort of bunk."

While not communicating with her brother in response to this publicly expressed opinion of her, Anne talked it over with her grandfather at Tuxedo Park. He suggested that she take a trip to Niagara-on-the-Lake, where "Bud" Alex, and Baby Guy were vacationing with Miss Ida Oliver, their nurse. Soon afterwards Anne left the Davison place and took a train to Buffalo. "Bud" was in on the publicity campaign being waged for his mother, and knew how to act to help her best. Anne was really fond of "Bud." They had been great chums together, when younger. When she arrived at the resort the two younger children greeted her effusively. "Bud" coldly turned his back and walked away.

That decided Anne. She returned to the Davison's and, all on her own, wrote a letter to her mother, asking forgiveness.

On Sept. 26 and 27, therefore, Winkler was able to write two banner headlined stories telling "in the young society girl's own words" how Anne had begged "Fifi" Stillman to forgive.

Anne, then 19, had acting on her mother's advice, telephoned Winkler at the American office and arranged for the interview. Mrs. Stillman had told her daughter the philosophy she had learned from the reporter.

"You can't ignore the public," she had said. "It is entitled to its news, even the dirtiest scandal news." And Anne had agreed.

Winkler met the young girl in her mother's apartment. The newspaper man spent several hours questioning her. It was a rule with him, that, whenever possible, he would obtain some document that could be photographed and reproduced in facsimile.

"Do you think you could get me the letter you wrote your mother?" Winkler asked.

PARK ROW REPORTERS KEPT JUMPING ON "DOUBLE STANDARD" STORY

Arthur O'Sullivan, New York Mirror, and Mazie Clemens, World, Claim Beats on Cathcart-Craven Tangle—Viscount Holmesdale Wins Praise of City Desk

By PHILIP SCHUYLER

NEW YORK newspapers went wild this week over a double standard story. Countess Vera Cathcart on Feb. 9, was detained by immigration authorities, charged with being guilty of 'moral turpitude." That came from ship news reporters and was everybody's story. But beats were scored subsequently.

ARTHUR O'SULLIVAN

In a story obtained by Arthur O'Sullivan and published in the New York Daily Mirror on Feb. 12, Phil A. Payne, managing editor, claims a beat of a full day on the engaging detail that while the Countess was being held in Ellis Island, the other man, the Earl of Craven, who admitted openly he had stolen the Countess from her husband, was being feted by New York society, instead of being in Bermuda, as other papers had published.

O'Sullivan came across the Earl following a tip which carried him to a hall on 43rd street, where a play called "Ninety Horsepower" was in rehearsal. An intimate friend of Craven's was playing the lead in this expected Broadway production.

VISCOUNT HOLMESDALE

The Mirror reporter told EDITOR & PUBLISHER, he "pounced on the little fellow," and found him "very agreeable."

While they were drinking—ginger ale—together, O'Sullivan said Craven pronounced the toast:

"Here's to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness."

O'Sullivan has worked in New York journalism for about 10 years. He has been with the Mirror since that tabloid started. Prior to that he was connected with the City News Association and the New York Tribune.

Two New York World reporters this week also won honors for their work in covering the immigration tangle. Miss Mazie Clemens was awarded a bonus, while to Jeffery Holmesdale was given "warm commendation." Citations in both cases were signed by James W. Barrett, city editor and pasted on the bulletin board for all the staff to see.

Miss Clemens' citation reads: that she was awarded the bonus because she obtained "first authentic information on the government's intention to deport the Earl of Craven."

To Miss Clemens, who, as a veteran on the World staff, has scored many a beat, the bonus was an old story, but the city editor's praise proved somewhat of a sensation for Holmesdale, who has only been in the newspaper business for the past five months.

"Mr." Holmesdale is the 29-year-old eldest son of Lord Amherst, British nobleman and direct descendant of Lord Jeffery Amherst, founder of Amherst College.

During the five months he has been in newspaper work on the staff of the World, he has hitherto been able to keep incognito. But his "excellent stories on the Cathcart-Craven case," so phrased by his city editor, dragged him reluctantly into publicity. He doesn't care to exploit his title.

Viscount Holmesdale happened to be a friend of the Earl of Craven. They had been to Eton together. But when he found him and obtained an exclusive beat on his intended departure to Canada, he did not go to him as a friend, but as a newspaper man.

Holmesdale before coming to this country in 1921 had been seven years in the British army. He served in the World War in France and Belgium, where he was wounded three times and awarded the Military Cross for gallantry in action. He was mustered out a captain. When he first arrived in this country he came on pleasure and liked it so well he decided to return. For a while he represented a British export house and then was a bond salesman for two years before turning newspaper reporter.

"Holmesdale is doing first-rate," is the terse comment of the World city desk.

The young nobleman, when asked why he had entered journalism, replied simply:

"Because I liked it."

And he means to stay in the American newspaper field if possible, he added.

Countess Vera was held by immigration authorities on a charge of "moral turpitude," when she arrived in New York, Feb. 9. The Earl was in New York. A decision regarding the case was scheduled for announcement Feb. 15. On Feb. 13, Miss Clemens, of the World was playing a minor role in covering the story. She was telephoning notables for their opinions on Countess Vera's detention. Suddenly it occurred to her she had previously made a contact with a person who might give her inside and advance information on the awaited decision. She immediately got in touch with this confidential source, learning the decision had already been made. Obtaining complete and authentic facts, Miss Clemens wrote her exclusive story in time for the Sunday World's second edition.

Mazie Clemens began her adventures in journalism back in 1908, when, then also on the World, she asked her editor the naive question, "Why should it be so difficult?" after all other New York reporters had been refused permission, to interview Cardinal Logue.

"Go get it," was the editor's laconic response.

And Mazie did just that.

Once at St. Patrick's Cathedral, the newspaper woman asked for an interview with the prelate.

"Why everyone is being refused," she was told.

"That's why I came," Miss Clemens answered.

Her persistence was rewarded and she returned to the office with a front page story that also carried a picture of herself conversing with His Eminence.

"Go get it" has since been Miss Clemens' constant inspiration.

In the same year she was heroine of a dare-devil newspaper stunt, being the first person, other than workmen, to cross the then nearly completed Manhattan bridge. Passage was made over a narrow footpath hung high between skeleton girders. Before undertaking the stunt, she had to give releases from liability to the city, the company and to her newspaper. She wrote a page feature on her adventure.

In 1919, Miss Clemens was granted a leave of absence from the World, and went abroad for the Ledger Syndicate of Philadelphia. On this trip among other things she interviewed the Queen of Belgium, General Foch, the late Cardinal Mercier, King Nichols of Montenegro, Pope Benedict and slipped into barricaded Fiume and out again with a story despite the rigid blockade and censorship of D'Annunzio.

While waiting for a train at Trieste, Italy, Miss Clemens read in a paper that D'Annunzio, then holding Fiume, had ordered out all newspaper correspondents, and was preventing their re-entry.

"Guss I'll go to Fiume," thought the newspaper woman.

She started off in that general direction and on the way met one of D'Annunzio's soldiers who could speak English and bribed him to get her somehow into the city.

"You can't get by in those clothes," the soldier said, noting the American traveling suit Miss Clemens was wearing.

She agreed and got into Italian peasant costume. The soldier was driving a load of vegetables into Fiume, and hid his newspaper passenger underneath the load.

Once in the city the soldier left Mazie behind to get the facts, and write the story of a city ruled by a poet-soldier.

"I thought I was stranded for sure," she recalled. "But fortunately I had been wise enough to give my soldier only half the bribe I'd promised him, and as I had hoped he came back to take me out of the city and get the rest of the cash."

Miss Clemens was brought up in a Catholic convent and was not allowed to look at a newspaper until she was 14.

In recent years mysterious murder cases have been her milieu. She obtained the only exclusive interview with Charlotte Mills in the Halls-Mills murder story. She is related distantly to Mark Twain.

"PUBLICITY HOAX"

So Graphic Alleges of Countess Cathcart Case

E. H. Gauvreau, managing editor of the New York Evening Graphic, writing under the pseudonym of the Earl of Gramercy, in his newspaper Feb. 18, alleges that the adventures of Vera, Countess of Cathcart, at Ellis Island are "part of a gigantic publicity stunt, entered upon by the Star Company, a Hearst organization, and the Countess." In support of his charge, he prints what is claimed to be a fascimile of portions of a contract between the two parties, dated Jan. 26.

William A. Deford, Hearst lawyer, earlier in the week began suit against Macfadden Publications, Inc., publishers of the Graphic, and obtained a temporary injunction restraining that newspaper from printing the Countess's memoirs, entitled "The Truth About My Love Affairs." The Graphic had obtained the memoirs from the Glasgow Weekly News.

A Scotch printer in the Graphic plant, Mr. Gauvreau said, subscribed to the Glasgow paper, and told him of the Countess's series, which had been printed in Scotland without a copyright notice.

Rafter, Sports Writer, Dies

A cold, which developed into pneumonia, caused the death last Saturday night of William A. ("Bill") Rafter, 51, for the past quarter of a century sporting editor of the Brooklyn Standard-Union. Mr. Rafter, who lived at 25 Lafayette avenue, Brooklyn, was honorary president of the Inter-City Baseball Writers' Association, and the dean of the metropolitan sports writers. For five years he was managing editor of the Police Gazette, and as a result of a lawsuit against the Fox Publishing Company, publishers of the Gazette, he was awarded $200,000. He claimed his contract had been improperly terminated.

Contest for Illinois Papers

Three awards to daily and weekly newspapers in Illinois for 1926 have been announced by the Medill School of Journalism of Northwestern University, Chicago. They will be given for the best news story of constructive value to the community, the best human interest story and the best editorial based on national affairs. Entries must be submitted before Dec. 1. Judges will be selected from the newspaper council of the school, which is composed of representatives from each Chicago newspaper and news association.

COMBINATION GROUP CHANGES NAME

Morning and Evening Associated Newspapers New Title Adopted at Kansas City Meeting—Officers Re-elected

(By Telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Feb. 16.—At the first meeting here today of the Combination Newspaper Publishers' Association since its organization last October in Chicago, it was voted to change the name to the Morning and Evening Associated Newspapers.

Members of the new organizations gave enthusiastic reports of the success of the combination program.

There are 18 newspaper members of the Association. Each member publishes a morning, evening and Sunday issue in cities ranging in population from 20,000 to 100,000.

In many cases the combination of ownership has placed in one newspaper plant a morning issue of one political faith and an evening issue of opposite political leaning, and vice versa.

Cowgill Blair of the Joplin (Mo.) Globe and News-Herald, secretary of the Association, told of the aims and benefits of the organization. He also pictured a newspaper situation 15 years from now when many of the large city dailies will be combined.

"Newspapers of tomorrow will be operated on the combination style," Mr. Blair said. "It is distinctly a new phase in American journalism. although there were a few combinations prior to the World War, recent combinations have been forced because of economic necessity.

"There are two answers open to newspapers; one is to combine; the other is to quit publishing.

"Increased cost of production, wage increases and the cost of paper have made necessary combinations.

"These combinations often are criticized on the grounds they tend toward monopolies. But the combinations are for the service of the reading public. It enables the publisher to give better feature material, to employ larger staffs, and generally to improve his product. It also enables the publisher to give two papers for the price of one.

"The Association has found that combinations stabilize journalism."

Mr. Blair said the papers now in the combinations have found it a great advantage in obtaining foreign advertising. On the editorial side, the reader of a combination paper obtains a broad and fair-minded view of local and national problems, getting views from every angle.

The following committee was appointed to draw up by-laws and a constitution and to investigate rate cards of members and aid them to simplify them: A. L. Shuman, Forth Worth Star-Telegram and Record-Telegram; Joel Bixby, Muskogee (Okla.) Times-Democrat; Cowgill Blair, Joplin (Mo.) Globe and News-Herald.

Cowgill Blair was re-elected secretary and J. S. Parks, Ft. Smith (Ark.) Southwest American and Times-Record, was re-elected treasurer. The next meeting will be held in Chicago in October.

Oregon Daily Wins Libel Suit

The Klamath Falls (Ore.) Evening Herald has won a suit in which it was charged with libeling W. P. Myers, formerly district attorney of Klamath County. An editorial in the Herald had charged Myers with wasting taxpayers' money. The defense was that the article was justifiable criticism of a public official.

Paper Sold for $235

The plant of the Cowlitz County News, Kelso, Wash., the paper owned and published by Thomas Dovery, Kelso editor, who was murdered in June, was sold at sheriff's auction recently, to J. F. Boncutter, who bid it in for $235. John Stenlund of Kelso holds a mortgage for $300 on the plant.

SOUTHERN NAMED NEW INLAND PRESS PRESIDENT

Group Decides to Make Cost Finding Reports on Dollar and Cents Rather Than Percentage Basis at Annual Meet in Chicago—Major Burgoyne Discusses Newsprint Embargo

(By Telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

CHICAGO, Ill., Feb. 17.—Cost finding, long an important research subject of the Inland Daily Press Association, was again stressed at the annual meeting of the Inland at the Hotel Sherman, Chicago, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week.

WILLIAM SOUTHERN, JR.

It was decided that the annual cost finding reports submitted by members be made out on a dollar and cents basis in the future, instead in percentages as heretofore, and will be signed by the submitting member. C. R. Butler of the Mankato (Minn.) Free Press presented the report of the Cost Finding Committee.

Clifford W. Yewdall, certified public accountant of New York who has been retained by the committee, reported on the merits of the new plan. W. R. Ronald, publisher of the Mitchell (S. D.) Republican was a member of the committee to succeed A. L. Miller, publisher Battle Creek Enquirer & News, resigned.

William Southern, Jr., editor of the Independence (Mo.) Examiner was elected president of the association to succeed George D. Lindsey publisher of the Marion (Ind.) Chronicle and the Sarasota (Fla.) Herald. Mr. Lindsey told Inland members he would not be able to serve them longer because of his Florida interests. Wil V. Tufford, Clinton, Ia., was re-elected secretary-treasurer.

American newspapers would get plenty of newsprint at prices at least as reasonable as they pay now, even should Canada place an embargo on pulpwood, Major H. B. Burgoyne, publisher of the St. Catherines (Ont.) Standard, told Inland members Tuesday.

Major Burgoyne said Canadians had been impressed on seeing several acres of virgin spruce and poplar consumed in one edition of an American Sunday newspaper, and enough pulpwood to furnish 2,500 tons of newsprint in one automobile edition of a Detroit daily.

Then when they saw mills handle Canadian wood with the power generated by a Canadian river built on the border, but on the United States side, they referred to themselves bitterly as "Hewers of wood and drawers of water" for the United States and its dailies.

The speaker said 80 per cent of the newsprint milled in Canada was used in the United States. He saw no reason why the ratio should not continue if an embargo were placed on pulpwood. F. V. Hayden, Chicago, executive secretary of the Agricultural Publishers' Association, recommended observance of the first Friday in November as Agricultural Day.

Harvey J. Kelly, chairman of the special committee of the American Newspaper Publishers Association, urged coordination of effort upon the publishers in regard to labor matters.

"Publishers," he said, "are loosely organized, while nearly every factor that enters into the production of a newspaper is controlled by an efficient, aggressive organization, national or international in scope and possessing disciplinary power over its individual members and the various groups into which they are banded.

"We cannot combine in that fashion, but we can co-operate and co-ordinate our efforts. We must, if publishers are to avoid being used as a football and if we are to retain some semblance of control of our business."

Mr. Kelly declared as an example of efficiently co-ordinated effort, the mechanical department unions. He declared they are the highest paid class of labor in the world.

"In a majority of cases, wage increases are being obtained," he said, "only because of superior organization and coordinated effort supplemented by the use of skilled negotiators, trained in the technical use of wage adjustment data and experienced in the psychological effect of veiled threats."

Unjust contracts come into effect because the average publisher, on account of business problems and lack of time, is at a disadvantage when pitted against organization representatives whose entire thought is given to wage negotiations, according to Mr. Kelly.

He urged the Inlanders to make full use of the Indianapolis office.

"We will endeavor to analyze local situations and assist publishers in advance of actual negotiations to decide just what they will do and what they will not do. We will place in the publisher's hands the best available proof of his position."

Arthur Myhrum, Chicago Tribune, speaking Tuesday on national advertising made the point that national advertising does not mean magazine advertising.

"There are 59 concerns in this country," he said, "which spent a half million dollars or more in 1924 for national advertising space. Together they spent more than $60,000,000 in newspapers and magazines.

"They are advertisers who come nearest to complete national distribution of their products. Ford cars, Wrigley gum, Ivory soap, Goodrich tires, Quaker Oats, Chesterfields, Pepsodent, Bull Durham, Postum Products, Victor Records are included in this list. The trade names in this list are as familiar as the street we live on. These advertisers spent more in newspapers than in magazines. During 1924, in 31 national magazines they spent $29,434,111. In newspapers, they spent $32,834,949, or $3,400,838 more than in magazines.

"If these big advertisers, with long and successful experience, find it profitable to spend more money in newspapers, why not the smaller firm?"

Mr. Myhrum quoted figures to show that in his newspaper's business survey among dealers and jobbers of various lines in Chicago an average of 65 per cent were in favor of manufacturers advertising in newspapers, with the remaining 34 per cent giving their preference to magazines, billboards, car cards, sampling, demonstrations, coupons, direct-by-mail and window and store advertising. This same survey conducted among like groups out of Chicago, showed 80 percent preferred newspaper advertising.

E. H. Harris, general manager of the Richmond (Ind.) Palladium on Wednesday explained his paper's savings system which has decreased labor turnover and increased the efficiency of the working personnel. Briefly, the Palladium enters into a contract with the employe whereby the employe agrees to save weekly for two years a percentage, not to exceed ten, of his wages, the paper agreeing to pay a dividend to the employe of 40 per cent of the amount saved at the end of the first year; 60 per cent of the amount saved at the end of the second year; and a dividend of 50 per cent of the amount saved each year thereafter, these savings to be in bank deposits, building and loan or payments on homes.

The first year's dividend cannot be withdrawn until the end of the second year when the second dividend is declared, then the employe can withdraw both. During the second year, the first dividend draws interest at the current bank rate. Sickness, time off, including strikes, can be made up by adding to the time period. Proportionate payments are made on the death of a depositor. Loans are permitted on account of death, sickness, etc. Dividends accrued to employes who resign or are discharged are prorated among other savers.

The plan has been in effect five years, and has become increasingly popular, Mr. Harris said. Labor turnover has been reduced materially, and the organization is functioning better because of added efficiency through experience of employes held, and there is a better spirit among them.

J. M. Beck, editor of the Centerville (Ia.) Iowegian and Citizen discussed libel actions. He told of a recent suit brought against his paper for $25,000 because of publication of a notice suit brought against a local firm. The court dismissed the action against the paper.

A. Schaefer of the Fort Wayne (Ind.) Journal-Gazette, led in a discussion in regard to the larger dailies usurping national advertising which could otherwise be obtained by the smaller town papers.

Public utility companies of the United States spent $16,000,000 last year in newspaper advertising, W. P. Strandborg, director of the Oregon Public Utility Information Bureau told Inland members at the Wednesday session. This sum may mount to more than $20,000,000 in this year, he stated.

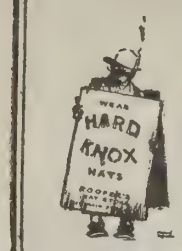
Surveying the utility situation from the advertising standpoint he said:

"In an advertising way, the surface has hardly been scratched. There are about 6,000 light and power companies in the United States and they all need advertising. There are considerably over one thousand manufactured gas companies and I don't know how many natural gas companies; they all need advertising; there are nearly 900 electric railway companies and they are in sore need of the moving power of advertising to sell mass transportation, and there are some 15,000 individual telephone companies.

"Advertising, as we have discovered, is the greatest opportunity that has ever been opened to us to enlist the co-operation and fair play of the American people in any just cause for which we are striving.

"Advertising, we now know, will do for us what it has been doing for everybody else that has tried it, and it is with much satisfaction that we can say that no utility of which we have any knowledge has ever stopped using newspaper advertising space after it has once been given a fair and honest trial."

He presented figures showing that more than 50 per cent of public utility advertising budgets went to newspapers.



"Another thought I would like to emphasize," he continued, " is that the utility companies are getting away from the 'press agent' and 'free publicity' evil with amazing rapidity. That vicious system has always been an anachronism but it grew out of causes for which a certain type of newspapers was just as much responsible as were the utilities. The newspapers wanted advertising and they were willing to exchange a certain amount of space in their news columns for a certain amount of so-called advertising handed out to the business office, and I am pretty much in doubt as to which was the poorest in quality—the stuff they called news or the junk they called advertising. Both the newspapers and the utilities ought to have been ashamed of themselves in condoning such an atrocious system. It was a form of

The Old Sandwich Man

by Chalmers L. Pancoast

The Home Week promoters had to Boost like Hell, and keep on boosting when the others quit. And a week was usually a long time to make the tiller of the soil hold hands with the local profiteers. Promoting closer and freer relationship between business men in smaller communities with farmers and laborers is a beautiful theory. But as a job it is a real one. As long as human nature is what it is, close community affiliation will always remain a beautiful theory.

Anyway a promoter of these affairs, whether he was an expert or amateur, had to be a clever, cheerful and a forgetting fellow.

The most successful "Old Home Weeks" have been sort of a county fair scheme at which the farmers could exhibit the fruits of their labors. Prizes were offered for excellence in every conceivable product of the farm and home, from babies down to berries, baskets and bedspreads.

But the judges were never very popular—afterwards.

Promoters of these celebrations had to have the advertising idea fully developed. A lot of important things had to be kept in mind. Provision had to be made for street decoration, window trims, free publicity in local newspapers. Then there were the attractions and amusements for the crowds, horseback parades, driving contests, goat roping, greased pig chase, climbing the greased pole, etc.

When there were more entrants than events, relay races, hundred yard dashes, foot races, potato races, three legged man races and barrel races down Main Street had to be provided.

Merchants always fell for an "Old Home Week"—or "Market Day" celebration, because they brought many people to town.

It was a big undertaking to advertise in such an elaborate way to bring farmers from miles around over muddy roads with the slow horse or mule drawn vehicle. It was making advertising do things it is not asked to do today.

Those old time circulars had to shout, yell and scream bargains; they had to say pretty things, plead and even pray to get the farmers to drive in.

Chapter XXVIII

The Old Sandwich Man

STRAPPED to the shoulders of the old sandwich men were signs telling of hats and pants and shirts, suits and overcoats, soups and savory lunches, all of which the sandwich man needed more than those to whom he advertised this merchandise.

He was merely the beast of burden for an advertising sign that was to be kept moving, because it would have been refused display anywhere else on the street.

All that was rquired of the bum who carried the sandwich sign was just enough life and energy to move about. He was not required to think, feel, smile or say yea or nay. Just keep moving—moving in a circle or straight line, it mattered not, moving where people were hurrying to and fro.

He has been rightly called the pack mule of advertising. And he has carried his burdens about as willingly.

He was the original pavement-pounder, the first to put painted advertising into motion, the first to bring advertising within elbow reach of the crowds.

The sandwich man is not as much in demand today as he was 20 or 30 years ago. Then they toted and lugged about all sorts of signs, and there were so many of them they cluttered up busy streets.

The old auction bell ringer, sidewalk barker and cheap store tout have almost entirely passed out of the picture. Not so with the sandwich man. He lingers still on the fringe of busy thoroughfares.

I have recently watched him shufflin'

Shufflin' and moverin' about, the Sandwich Man can still be seen carrying the Message of Advertising along and moverin' about, as unkempt, unclean, watery-eyed and as scare-crowish as of old.

On Sixth avenue, New York, he may be seen occasionally, but on fashionable Fifth avenue never. Even at Columbus Circle and Bowling Green and City Hall Square he may be seen advertising a quick lunch, passport photos, second-hand clothing or something too cheap for newspaper space.

In the old days the quickest way to spot a professional sandwich man was by the booze-bloom on his nose. They were largely human wrecks upon the beach of the sea of publicity. They were besotted specimens of humanity, who wandered sleepily about the slums, their clothes torn and soiled, with not even a market value at the cheapest pawn shop.

Into the advertising business had come these bums, merely as beasts of burden. They were irreclaimable, repulsive vagabonds; figures of tragedy careening down the scale of life.

They all had a story to tell. And their whiskey-corrod d brains made the truth a wild fairy story.

In the nineties these gangs of wandering city tramps found the sandwich man game paid for a cot every night in some flop house, and enabled them to buy beer and cheap whiskey with free lunch thrown in.

It took a genuine bum with no self-respect to make the best sandwich man.

Sometimes a fit of delirium tremens gave the sign extra animation.

At best sandwiching came under the head of "odd jobs." And many merely worked at it to obtain just enough money to buy drinks and a cot in a ten-cent lodging house. They never worked as long as they had a dime.

As a type they were men just one step removed from the "never-work" bum; generally drinking men to whom the call of wife and home was but an empty sound. The tough saloon was his club, and in the ten-cent lodging house he was content to sleep in forgetfulness until tomorrow came with another sign to carry.

The sandwich sign has adorned the shoulders of beauties as well as bums. I remember several benefit performances where beautiful young girls wore sandwich signs strapped across their white shoulders and paraded and drilled on a stage for money for charity.

Local business houses and advertising manufacturers paid a good high rate to have their advertising messages thus brought to public attention.

The girls enjoyed the stunt of having their beauty sandwiched in between the boards which told about everything from barbers to horseshoers.

It was once a great money-raising stunt to get all national advertisers selling in a town to go in on these local affairs. Food manufacturers were solicited for advertising matter to distribute and display to help pay off everything from church mortgages to burying the town drunkard. And the sandwich man idea was always pulled in on these occasions. It was the cheapest and easiest way to give highly colored posters good display.

Sandwich advertising men in large cities always have been old men with broken lives. Never have young men entered this profession of advertising in action. It was the bread winners branch of advertising. When you buy a man's back and chest for advertising purposes you buy display space with foot-work advantages only. No headwork, except a sense of direction and a keen sight for crowded streets, and very little of that.

It was and still is one of the easiest branches of the advertising profession in which to qualify. Any man who has learned to use his feet and move about can enter. Many solicitors also have this qualification, and it would seem at times that they must have served an apprenticeship in the old school of sandwich men.

Chapter XXIX

The Wax Figure—Is It Alive?

THE first time I ever saw a wax figure that was not a wax figure was when I was a kid in a drug store back in Ohio.

It was a sensation. The crowd before the window was trying to guess whether it was alive or not. I was the envy of all the kids. I worked in the drug store and I knew.

This was back when Between the Acts Little Cigars, were being introduced by this novel advertising method. This chap was a wonder at staring at the crowd without blinking an eye. He was advertised to appear in the drug store window at a certain time, morning, afternoon and evening. We had the crowds.

A big sign over the window put this question to the crowd:—

IS HE ALIVE?

This was the most sensational advertising that had ever hit our town. People were making bets about the wax man. I'll say he was a wonder and had people guessing. At a certain time we would draw a curtain and the human wax man, who was very human, would take a rest.

I have seen many wax men since, but never one who could control his eyes and face like this old timer. We sent out hand-bills with such sensational heads as:—

You May Have Seen the WAX MAN BUT You Never Saw Him Move!
Not Even an Eyelash!
Is He WAX?—Are you willing to bet on your opinion?

The "Wax Figure" was a clever idea and it presented Between The Acts Cigars to public in such a way that they could not be forgotten.

During the hours the Wax figure was on exhibition there was always a large crowd in front of the store and in the store. All were trying to guess whether it was a man or machine.

Sensational advertising was unusual at that time, but it struck the fancy of the public and was good publicity.

In February, 1924 I saw a "Wax Woman" in a gown shop on 47th street in New York, pulling the same stunt. A crowd was before the window. I thought the stunt was too old to work, evidently it is as good for getting a window crowd today as ever.

Wax figures have always been good advertisements whether alive or not. They have improved in beauty and value with the years. The old time wax figures did not look human—they had a stony expression and the garments displayed on them were often poorly advertised.

At about the same time the Wax Figure stunts was being worked to arouse the curiosity of the people, the Public Mesmerist came along with his sensational publicity trick. A whole town could be thrown into a state of intense excitement by the announcement that on a certain afternoon at four o'clock Professor Passemont would mesmerize a victim in the display window of the Bunk Furniture Store.

The victim was usually some local character hired for the purpose. He would be mesmerized by the silk-hatted Professor and left in the window to astonish and mystify the passers-by.

The victim would be stretched out on a bed or davenport in full view of the public until the following morning. At an advertised hour the victim would be brought out of the trance.

Naturally the furniture store cashed in on the exciting publicity, and the professor collected from the easy store-keeper.

Mesmerism was the most astounding mystery of that day, and its uses for publicity purposes were endless.

A great many cheap shows carried one of the dark-piercing-eyed professors who was the advertised sensation of the show.

Crowds of curious people flocked to the shows to see some of the town boys cut up didos on the stage. These town boys loved a joke and they were well paid for the parts they played. Some of the weak-minded youngsters could be rendered helpless by the suggestions of the animal magnetism of the mesmerizing faker.

It was a publicity stunt to bunk the public, but as mesmerism was a deep mystery at that time the people fell for it.

The reason the Wax Figure was a valuable publicity idea was because there was the element of doubt. A man who could stand in a window for hours, controlling the muscles of his face, hands and body so perfectly that it became a baffling mystery was good advertising for the store putting on the stunt.

Just so was the mesmerism stunt good for publicity because it mystified the public.

NEWSPAPER LINAGE, 30 LARGE U. S. CITIES, JANUARY, 1926-1925

GAIN of almost 11 percent is noted in the January linage of 133 newspapers in 30 large American cities in the tables compiled by the New York Evening Post Statistical Department, Inc. Five Sundays in 1926 against 4 in 1925 make fair comparison of the month's totals impossible, but the indicated trend is still upward. The tables for each city follow:

NEWSPAPER MAKERS AT WORK

By PHILIP SCHUYLER

"Keep the home folks busy and happy"—HUGH J. POWELL.

IT is nearing planting time in Coffeyville, Kan., and the Journal senses the season. While the North lies buried a foot deep in snow, the Southwest thinks of seeds, soft sod and gardens. Next month the ground will be opened.

Soon a front page story in the Coffeyville Journal, owned and operated by Hugh J. Powell, will be the report of an inspection of local lawns, porch boxes, back yards and gardens, an excellent feature for papers in cities the size of this one, which claims nearly 14,000.

"Get down to the earth with the people," is a Journal policy. "And keep them busy and happy."

It was phrased thus by Mr. Powell, who told how a paper in a town similar to his may assist in community development.

"We run a regular garden column which varies according to season," he said. "But in spring we make a special effort to awaken in our readers interest and pride in their own front lawns and gardens. At this time, we send one of our reporters criss-crossing the town, up one street and down another, instructed to write down what he sees in the way of neatness, untidiness, order or disorder.

"He will write that Mrs. Jones on West street has set out very attractive window boxes, that perhaps it would be well if a little clean-up took place around the depot, that the yard of Elmer Smith on North street is well worth the walk to look at. One family's grass needs clipping, another's lawn shows careful tending.

"Usualy the report is favorable," Mr. Powell added.

Bigged things grow out of this down-to-the-earth idea, all tending to build the community. Two instances, sketched by Mr. Powell, serve as examples.

Business men raised money enough to finance a canning factory for Coffeyville. All right. No need to import truck to be canned. But there wasn't sufficient variety obtainable in local gardens. The Journal's agricultural editor dug into seed catalogues and government bulletins, his findings were published, and, as one result, 658 different kinds of tomatoes were planted. The factory got good choice of supplies at home; town folk got something to do to add to their income; and there was real reader interest between column rules of the Journal.

"This same farm department of the Journal," Mr. Powell said, "also had something to do with bringing the cotton industry to Coffeyville. Cotton growing is still new there, but shipments last year totaled 800 bales.

"Coffeyville is an industrial as well as agricultural community. It lies in the oil and gas belt of Kansas and claims two oil refineries, employing about 450 men each. It is also a railroad division."

The other end of Mr. Powell's policy phrase—"keeping the home folk busy and happy," the Journal publisher believes one of the most important duties of the country press. He doesn't apologize for it, except to say that perhaps it isn't understood by the metropolitan editorial mind, the kind of people who cleverly refer to his field as being "hickly" populated.

Accomplishment of this ideal is unique in Coffeyville only in that it is perhaps more apparent than in many cities elsewhere. The sports page is, as usual, its chief outlet. The Journal decidedly favors local sports over national events. Considerable space is given the local bowling league, the twilight baseball league, and, in winter, the indoor game of dart ball.

In summer when the boys go off to camp, the Journal is not content merely to see them troop out of town and welcome them back with publicity. A reporter is sent with them to send back daily stories of their adventures, their baseball triumphs, their hikes, and even their trivial chatter. The Journal sports writer is always willing to umpire a baseball game or iron out a local argument regarding rules.

School news is big news in the Journal. A reporter calls regularly on the different teachers, and the city room cry is "Let's have names of a lot of kids in the paper."

"Names, names, names, even though casually mentioned, must always be the backbone of a country paper," Mr. Powell said.

Thus it is the Journal tells the story of the country press, a story of close alliance between reader and publisher.

Sometimes, according to Mr. Powell, it is too close a relationship. One is too easily called to account. The publisher is like the old country doctor, handing out advice to individuals who call at his office as well as to the numbers who read his editorials.

"A country newspaper is a real force in the nation's life, if its ideals are right," Mr. Powell declared. "I'm not claiming any particular virtue for my own newspaper, but I do believe the country field has never been completely appreciated."

Mr. Powell has been owner and publisher of the Journal now for 12 years. Before that he had run the Cherryvale Republican for nearly a decade, entering the newspaper business after a short time as school teacher.

He doesn't confine his newspaper interests to Coffeyville. He is a member of the third district of the Kansas Publishers' Association, and for four years has been advisory chairman of the central division of the Associated Press.

CRIME NEWS OVER-PLAYED

So Declares McLaughlin, New York's New Police Commissioner

Stories on crime are featured too much by the newspapers, was the assertion made by Police Commissioner George V. McLaughlin, addressing the New York Newspaper Club, Feb. 11.

"But I don't mean to suggest that you keep crime news out", he added. "A little better balancing is the solution.

"Place more emphasis on the apprehension of criminals. The average gunman today is a weak-minded individual between 16 and 25 years of age, and a fair percentage of New York gunmen are users of narcotics. When a newspaper account points out to one of these men how easy it is to enter a store, get a few hundred dollars and get away free, naturally he is willing to take the chance. However, I do not know how much effect such stories have or how much they encourage crime; do not get the impression that I am unduly excited about it. After forty days on my job, this is my impression, which may change with experience."

Mr. McLaughlin expressed appreciation of the cooperation the newspapers had given him and said he believed in the utmost frankness with the newspapers, except when certain police information needed protection. He realized that a Police Commissioner could talk himself into failure, he said.

Dwight Perrin presided at the club luncheon when Mr. McLaughlin spoke. He is city editor of the New York Herald Tribune and club president. It was the first of a series of luncheons the club is promoting.

In addition to Mr. Perrin, those at the speaker's table included: Philip Hoyt, formerly New York Times, now Fifth Deputy Police Commissioner; Ralph E. Renaud, assistant managing editor, Herald Tribune; Robert E. Livingston, Consolidated Gas Company; William Gregory and Augustin McNally, club secretary.

Rev. S. Parkes Cadman, who is now writing a daily column for the New York Herald Tribune Syndicate, addressed the club Feb. 17.

Leadership!

THE CITY OF CINCINNATI has estabished a government by business management in place of a government by politician management from which it suffered many years. The city manager is C. O. Sherrill, an army engineer; its board of directors, known as the City Council, consists of outstanding citizens of the community in place of ward politicians.

How this change was brought about thru the efforts of a SINGLE NEWSPAPER, The Cincinnati Post, is here briefly told:

November 7, 1923, The Post called on the people to organize for a city manager government charter.

November 28, 1923, it repeated the call, and continued to repeat it from time to time.

In January, 1924, an informal city-manager charter movement was organized, and in the following month a birdless ballot movement was launched.

May 29, 1924, The Post editorially called for a merger of the two movements.

June 4, 1924, the two movements were merged and a city-manager charter drafted.

November 4, 1924, the charter won by a majority of 50,000.

November 5, 1924, The Post called on the public to organize for 1925 in order to elect proper men to take charge of the new government.

From time to time The Post asked its readers to suggest names of citizens who would make worthy councilmen.

Among those suggested and later supported by The Post were Murray Seasongood, Charles O. Rose, Tylor Field, E. T. Dixon, Stanley Matthews and Julius Luchsinger.

These six were among the nine charter candidates who were nominated and elected.

Immediately after the election The Post urged that Murray Seasongood be chosen mayor.

Seasongood is the mayor of the city. Leadership!

RETAILERS TOLD NEWSPAPERS BEST WITH DIRECT MAIL SUPPLEMENTAL

David Lampe, of the Hub, Baltimore, Scores Advertising Inefficiency in Department Stores—Much Waste in Mail Promotion—Banker Tells of Prosperity

MAIL promotion was held as only supplemental to newspaper advertising by David Lampe, advertising manager of the Hub, Baltimore, addressing closing sessions late last week of the National Retail Dry Goods Association, Pennsylvania Hotel, New York. Newspapers are the best retail medium, he said.

"Large stores as a rule do direct mail advertising with so little efficiency," he said, "that to tell you any average method would be to tell you a method so far from each extreme of what is being done, that it would sound altogether impossible. Even in the matter of real appropriation I find large department stores vary so widely that it is impractical to offer any suggestion. The only thought I can offer is that the direct mail appropriation be carefully nursed, so that the maximum results may be obtained.

"In most stores the advertising departments are organized to feed the newspapers with display copy. Now I am not overlooking the fact that the newspaper is, after all, the most dependable medium for the advertising of a retail business. But there are so many things that direct mail advertising can do and that newspaper advertising cannot do, and there are so many ways in which direct mail advertising can give profitable support to newspaper advertising that I was once dazed to find here in New York a department store that is commanding country-wide attention, boasting that it did not even maintain a mailing list a few years ago."

The attitude of the small store was presented by P. K. Crocker, advertising and sales manager of John Schoonmaker & Son, Inc., Newburgh. He said the store did an annual business of between $1,000,000 and $2,000,000.

"Direct mail in our store," he said, "is in co-ordination with rather than supplementary to our newspaper advertising. Which is paramount in importance is, with us, almost a debatable question. While we should be loath to minimize the advantages proved from a well-calculated use of newspaper space, our experience with our direct mail medium would forbid us to forswear this latter form of publicity in any event. We have tested both, tested them, we believe, thoroughly. We have the analyses, a definite understanding of their relative performances.

"If some of our advertising experts, our great national direct mail advertisers, could inspect the waste receptacle of the average small town postoffice, I believe they would get an awful jolt. They might alter their mailing practices and thereby save much futile expenditure. I have found these receptacles stuffed to the brim with most pretentious and expensive products of the graphic arts. Beautiful speciments mingled with apple cores and banana peels.

"Usually this literature bore on the cover the clever attention-arresting appeal of which we hear so much—and with it third-class postage. It gave me a shock. I discussed it with the local postmasters. Almost invariably they told me that the people of their communities were so deluged with third-class mail, advertising of all sorts, that they had in many instances become almost resentful. As soon as a communication was recognized as advertising matter it was headed for the wastebasket without being read or even opened."

O. H. Cheney, vice-president of the American Exchange-Pacific National Bank, addressing delegates Feb. 8, advised them that they could make 1926 prosperous by advertising.

"The first big problem that business must face in 1926 is too much prosperity," he said. "The American business man has always felt that prosperity is one thing of which we cannot have too much. We try to crowd next year's prosperity and the prosperity of the year beyond into this year. We have been making ourselves feel prosperous by eating breakfast luncheon and dinner all in the morning.

"In the first place, it is obvious that the conditions we had in 1925 are being carried over into 1926. January figures indicate this and the chances are that the trend will continue. This means, in general, that we shall probably have prosperity at least during the first part of 1926. We have had prosperity in 1925 because we really couldn't help it. If we do not have prosperity all through 1926 it will be because we can help it but don't.

"We must not let this prosperity parade degenerate into a joy-ride. What we need is prosperity with both hands on the wheel. I am afraid that at times we have been indulging in one-arm driving. Fortunately for us the Federal Reserve traffic squad is on the job. They not only time the business prosperity car but they can enforce the regulations, and, what is more, they have some control over the supply of gas. They can either let the prosperity driver crash into a telegraph pole or they can let him run out of gasoline. They usually urge him to take it easy and look ahead for the sharp turn.

"Speculation—and I do not mean necessarily harmful speculation—has called for a good portion of our great resources. It must be admitted that during the past year the banks called less upon the Federal Reserve than would be expected. The banks drew on their own reserves to a great extent. And also, manufacturers and distributors did not need credit so much as might be thought necessary, considering the great volume of business, because their assets have been in much more liquid form than they have been for some time. The much-discussed hand-to-mouth buying habit has probably also had some part in keeping down the need for credit."

Surveying conditions in general, Mr. Cheney found the railroads just ending a happy year. The automotive industry has "again confounded the pessimistic statisticians" and the building construction industry has set another record. On the building progress he added that "there is little doubt in my mind that 1926 will not be as big a building year as 1925, although the present rate may continue through the Spring." He said he hoped the building recession would come gradually.

"It is only in the last few years that business has discovered that there is no Santa Claus. We used to think that prosperity was some genial and bewhiskered old thing which we couldn't see and which worked in mysterious ways. We discovered that prosperity was just ourselves dressed up and that business prosperity is to a considerable degree what we make it. And we went too far. We thought we could have Christmas all the year round by just putting on whiskers and acting jolly. We thought we could be prosperous merely by telling ourselves that we were. Prosperity talk is no substitute for work."

Chicago Ex-Editor Freed in Libel

Arthur F. Lorenz, formerly editor of the Chicago German language newspaper Staats Zeitung, won a two-year fight to escape jail sentence for libeling the American Legion when Judge Eller in the Criminal Court, Chicago, Feb. 16, ordered his release from custody at a hearing on a writ of habeas corpus. He had been fined $1 and sentenced to serve six months. He paid the fine and then set up the contention that the jail sentence was not applicable, since the law provided a fine or a sentence.

PUBLISHERS

who Advertise in Cincinnati give first place to the TIMES-STAR

Most publishers of books, magazines and newspapers sell advertising. Most successful publishers take their own medicine and buy advertising. Being in the advertising business they are the shrewdest of buyers. They know advertising values from the inside. They understand the difference between A. B. C. audited circulations and the unaudited statements of individual publishers. They know that concentrated circulation in any given market is the very crux of any newspaper's advertising value precisely as wide-spread national circulation is essential to a magazine that is to cover the national field.

Knowing these things and having access to the sources of information upon which to base their selections of advertising media for the Cincinnati market, the publishers who cultivate this market place twice as much display advertising in the Times-Star as they place in both morning newspapers combined. For every five inches they place in the second afternoon newspaper they place eight in the Times-Star.

This is perfectly logical, because the purpose of their publicity is to increase their own local circulations—to sell more of their publications in the Cincinnati market and thus increase the value of their advertising space to those of their advertisers who aspire to create a more favorable local background for their national advertising.

Spend 39 Million Dollars Annually---

And There Are 4 Copies of The News Leader in Every Three Homes

Every home in Richmond spends an average of nearly $1,000 a year.

And for every three homes in Richmond there are four copies of The News Leader sold in Richmond every day.

That's certainly strong proof that The News Leader gives complete coverage of Richmond.

And moreover, The News Leader is the ONLY way to get this complete coverage.

In 1925 The News Leader sold an average of 61,998 every day.

Every day 39,000 families read the advertisements in The News Leader.

Every day 39,000 families in Richmond buy over 50,000 News Leaders.

Every day 39,000 families read the advertisements in The News Leader and buy the products they see advertised in their home paper, The News Leader.

GROUND BROKEN FOR NEW $3,000,000 HOME OF PITTSBURGH PRESS

Three Story Plant Will Cover a Block of Ground and House $1,000,000 Worth of Presses—Will Provide 153,600 Feet of Floor Space

GROUND was broken Feb. 15, for the new home of the Pittsburgh Press, Scripps-Howard newspaper, which when completed will represent an expenditure of $3,000,000.

The new plant will be three stories high with footings to carry five additional floors and will stand on a block of ground bounded by First and Second avenues, Blockhouse Way and Short street. The 12 in the other and provision will be made for future installations that ultimately will consist of three rows of 16 presses each or a total battery of 48 units.

With its original installation, the Press will be able to produce 24-page newspapers at the rate of 378,00 an hour, 40-page newspapers at the rate of 210,000 an hour or 64 page newspapers at the rate of 157,000 an hour, all printed, folded, counted and pasters may be made, and the new rolls of paper started through without requiring the presses to be stopped.

In the present plant a 48-page paper is the limit of capacity. With the new installations, the Press will be able to print a 64-page paper with 50 per cent greater production capacity than is now possible on the 48-page edition.

In the basement of the new building will be the electrical equipment, the boilers for heating, reel room and paper storage. The first floor will be the press room, mailing room and the loading platform for the distribution department. Editorial rooms and business offices will occupy the second floor and the third floor will be devoted to the composing room, stereotyping and engraving departments.

At present 28 trucks and 20 motor-

Architect's sketch of new Pittsburgh Press Building

W. T. Grange Construction Company has the contract for the building.

In its new building The Press will have a basement and three floors of a structure 240 feet long on First and Second avenues, by 160 feet deep. This means 38,400 square feet of floor space on each floor or a total of 153,600 square feet in the entire plant. In the present building there are five floors of 8,000 square feet each, a total of 40,000 square feet.

Probably the most notable single item in the plans for the new building and equipment is the contract with the Goss Printing Press Company for more than $1,000,000 worth of new presses. This is said to be the largest order for newspaper printing presses ever placed and it will give the Press perhaps the finest press equipment in the world.

There will be 28 black and white units, 7 folders, 7 pairs formers and a mammoth magazine color press in the first installation. The black and white units will be placed in two rows, 16 presses in one and delivered to the mail room. These presses will deliver the paper in any desired number of sections.

Comic, magazine and photogravure sections of the Press will be printed on the new magazine color press.

Drives for these presses will be furnished by Westinghouse motors and controls built in Pittsburgh. It will require 850 horsepower to drive the 28 black and white units and 125 horsepower to operate the color press.

All of the presses will be equipped with the latest type of automatic paper feeding devices installed beneath the presses and so arranged that flying cycles are required to distribute the Press on week days ad 75 trucks and motorcycles comprise the fleet for the Sunday editions.

More than three car loads of paper are used every day to print the Press. Last year the Press used more than 32,000 tons or more than 64,000,000 pounds of white paper. Ink used last year totaled 530 tons.

To move the paper and ink into the new plant, the Press will have an overhead track built in from the Pennsylvania railroad and the heavy rolls of paper will be handled by an automatic drop that will eliminate moving it by hand.

FIRST SECTION ENQUIRER PLANT READY APRIL 1

5-Story Portion of New 14-Story Home to Be Occupied by Clerical, Editorial and Business Staffs on That Date

The first five-story section of the new 14-story plant of the Cincinnati Enquirer will probably be completed for occupancy by April 1, the Fuller Construction Company, contractors, announced this week. It is expected that clerical, editorial and business departments can be moved in at that time.

The erection of the huge presses will commence on that date, as will demolition of the present building to make way for work on the second contiguous section, which will be brought to the five-story level before further work is done.

There will be no elevators in the first section of the building and none of the mechanical equipment will be ready for transfer at that time, it is said. This will be transferred about the time the erection of the new presses is completed, so that there will be no interruption in the publication of the newspaper either on its daily or its Sunday schedule.

When the second section of the structure is brought up to the height of the first section, then work on both sections will be completed simultaneously. By the time the second section is up to the fifth floor it is planned to have the newspaper part of the structure in full operation so that business will be conducted regularly without interference while the remainder of the building is being completed. The entire job will require about two years to complete.

One of the most interesting features of the preliminary work on the first section of the structure has been the great care which has been taken by the contractors to place an adequately strong foundation under the building.

The south wall of the first section adjoins the old Palace Hotel. In order to make the foundation for this south wall absolutely secure, the contractors constructed a chain wall fo concrete under the stone foundations of the Palace Hotel's north wall from the front to the rear of the building for its entire length. In the front the chain wall was excavated sectionally and poured with concrete to a depth of 28 feet below the street level at some points and 43 feet at others.

The Making of Newspaper Serials Is

A TRADE IN ITSELF

THERE is a wide difference in technique in the writing of SUCCESSFUL serials for newspaper publication and in the writing of magazine stories or novels in book form. The audience is different. Character delineation must be in stronger, broader strokes. Holding of reader interest through each and every chapter is more essential. Plots must be built on a different plan.

There is only one editor in America who has made a specialty of producing serial stories BUILT FOR THE NEEDS OF NEWSPAPERS. He is Eugene MacLean, president and editor-in-chief of NEA Service.

Working closely, day by day, with his talented men and women associates, he supervised the preparation of "The Flapper Wife," "Footloose," "Spinsterhood" and "The Yellow Stub"---all recent NEA Service releases AND EVERY ONE A SMASHING SUCCESS!

Eugene MacLean

In previous years, in other fields, he developed the idea of localized newspaper fiction and proved that such fiction, handled with skill and specialized knowledge, is a sure circulation builder.

NEA's next serial release, "These Women," has been written by MacLean under the pen name of Malcolm Duart. It is especially designed to carry daily newspapers past the usually difficult months of April and May.

"THESE WOMEN" Is For Release March 29.

"WOMEN love trouble. If they haven't any, they go out and make some for themselves."

Morton laughed, as he reached across the table for a match.

"Don't you—all of you!" he insisted.

The girl gazed at him somberly. For a long while she made no reply, but studied his face as he blew careless smoke wreaths from his cigaret.

"You and your women!" she said, suddenly. Her jeweled fingers clung together, hard, until her knuckles showed white. "Your women—that's the only trouble. I didn't make that trouble. You made it."

(That's how "These Women" begins.)

DETROIT SHOPPING NEWS GUARANTEES NO DECREASE IN NEWSPAPER SPACE

Stores Backing Publication Contract to Maintain Present Linage in Dailies—Iron-Clad Rules Govern Copy for New Advertising Paper

THE Detroit Shopping News, a new venture sponsored by 25 of the leading retail merchants of the city, got away to a flying start with its first issue, Feb. 8, according to Henry C. Veon, general manager. The issue consisted of 150,000 copies, which were distributed by a special force of carriers, 350 in number. They cover the entire city under the direction of six district managers, each of whom is responsible for the distribution in his own district. Above the district managers are 14 inspectors who cover the city in automobiles and see that the work is being properly done. Mr. Veon declares that distribution was perfect at the start, and will be so maintained at all costs.

Present plans call for the publication of 150,000 copies once each week for the first few weeks, with later a gradual increase to 200,000 and then to 300,000. Then it is planned to issue twice a week. At present the paper is issued Saturday, dated Monday. Later is will also be issued on Wednesday, dated Thursday.

At present the paper consists of 12 pages, representing about $250,000 worth of advertising, and Mr. Veon states that he has 24 columns of advertising on the waiting list at the present time, and plans to increase the paper to 16 pages, which will probably be the limit as to size. Before the end of the year he expects the paper to be representing nearly three-quarters of a million dollars worth of advertising, with the paper on a twice-a-week basis in the enlarged size. Advertisers are delighted with the results of the first issue, according to Veon.

The terms of the contract under which advertising is accepted for publication are iron-clad and very specific. A code of ethics adopted by the board of directors on Jan. 8, is incorporated in the contract. The front page of the paper is devoted to "specials," each ad in a box, and no two advertisers are allowed to specialize on the same article the same day. All copy for the paper must be in the hands of the publisher by Tuesday preceding the date of publication, and failure to deliver it on time causes the space alloted to that advertiser to be left blank, with only the firm name in the center, and penalizes the advertiser double the regular cost of the space.

No comparative prices are permitted to be stated. No reference may be made to former prices nor to percentage of reduction in the case of articles on special sale. Such expressions as "1-3 off," etc., are prohibited. Rules are stringent regarding the amount of space alloted to basement ads, and no such ad, nor any offering of seconds nor of soiled goods, may be made on the first page, even though specified as such.

No unqualified statements, such as "Biggest Bargain Ever Shown," etc., may be used, and rules are provided regarding the use of trade names of fabrics, finishes and qualities, and in the case of furs the real name of the fur must follow the trade name, as "Hudson Seal," (dyed muskrat). It is also specified that there must be on hand sufficient merchandise to fill the reasonably expected demand resulting from the insertion of any advertisement. No article may be taken off sale before Tuesday morning.

A condition of acceptance of advertising from any firm is that the regular newspaper advertising must not be cut down, nor any cut made in the appropriation for such advertising. Should such cuts be made the contract with Shopping News becomes void. No mention shall be made in Shopping News of any advertisement appearing in any newspaper or on handbills, or in any other form.

The publisher is not responsible for errors in publication of advertising and the burden of providing correct proof is on the advertiser. The manager of Shopping News is sole judge of whether or not the copy presented complies with the rules and regulations of the paper. No reference may be made in any advertisement to the giving out of trading stamps or the making of other forms of rebate.

The matter of publishing such a shopping news has been hanging fire in Detroit for the past three years, but never came to a direct head until within the past few months when Veon began an active campaign in favor of it. Mr. Veon came to Detroit from Los Angeles, where he has been in newspaper work for some time, but was formerly with the Detroit Free Press and the old Detroit Journal.

The minimum contract accepted by Shopping News is for one year, and each advertiser is required to take stock in the enterprise in proportion to the space purchased. No space may be sold by an advertiser without the advice and consent of the manager of the paper. The corporation is not organized for profit, states Mr. Veon, but is run at cost. The advertisers are charged what is expected to be the cost, plus a margin of ten per cent for safety, and if there are surplus funds at the end of the year they will be distributed in the form of dividends on the stock.

An accurate check is kept on goods sold by advertisement in Shopping News, according to Veon, and many of the articles described in the first issue were "buried" so that customers were obliged to ask for them in order to see them. Records are kept on the merchants' sales-slips of such articles as are requested by customers as "advertised in Shopping News." In several cases sales of large items, such as articles of furniture, were reported as one hundred per cent.

Merchants sponsoring the Detroit Shopping News are: C. H. Baker, Bedell Company, S. L. Bird & Sons, Browning King, A. E. Burns & Co., F. G. Clayton Company, Crowley, Milner & Co., Cunnignham Drug Company, Frank & Seder Company, R. H. Fyfe & Co., Grinnell Brothers, E. J. Hickey & Co., Himelhoch Bros. & Co., The J. L. Hudson Company, Ernst Kern Company, Lane-Bryant Company, MacDairmid Candy Company, The Netting Company, Owen & Co., T. B. Rayl Company, The Rollins Company, Russeks, Thomas P. Stack, Tuttle & Clark, and Wright, Kay & Co.

Officers and directors are: President, Oscar Weber, of the J. L. Hudson Company; vice-president, W. P. Emery, of Crowley, Milner & Co.; second vice-president, Ernst Kern, of Ernst Kern & Co.; secretary, Z. Himelhoch, of Himelhoch Bros. & Co.; treasurer, John A. Brown, of T. B. Rayl & Co.

The directors are the above officers and also: A. R. Cunningham, of Cunningham Drug Company; C. E. Bird, of S. L. Bird & Sons; Jay Grinnell, of Grinnell Bros.; H. L. Ware, of Frank & Seder; A. O. Day, of R. H. Fyfe & Co.; and I. J. Andries, of Bedell Company.

The operating committee consists of H. P. Hildreth and Edward L. Wright. Fred C. Veon is general manager.

The position of each firm's advertisement changes with every issue of the paper, the plan being to rotate them in regular order so that each receives equal prominence.

DAILY CELEBRATES 90TH YEAR

Illinois State Register Owners Have Been Partners 50 Years

The Springfield (Ill.) State Register on Feb. 10 celebrated the 90th anniversary of its founding. The paper was launched on that date 1836 in Vandalia, Ill., then the state capital. It was moved to Springfield in 1837.

The present owners of the Register took charge in 1881. The veteran editor-in-chief, Henry Wilson Clendenin, 88 years old, is still at his desk every day. The publisher, Senator Thomas Rees is also active in the management of the properties.

Concerning the anniversary Senator Rees said:

"Mr. Clendenin and I have been associated in various capacities for over 60 years in all, and as partners in business, a period of 50 years. During that time there has never been a break between us. The State Register had for many years been exceedingly unprofitable and had bankrupted about every person who ever had anything to do with it. So when he had the hardihood to take on the job, our friends pitied us and others laughed at us, but at the beginning of the 45th year we are still here."

Organizing Co-operative State Bureau

Eighteen afternoon newspapers, at a meeting at Greensboro, N. C., recently, effected an organization with a view to providing a press bureau at Raleigh, the better to distribute among this group of newspapers the news of the government offices and agencies. An executive committee composed of W. Carey Dowd, chairman, Charlotte News; J. L. Horne, Rocky Mount Telegram, and D. S. Elias, Asheville Times, was formed to select a bureau manager and obtain quarters at Raleigh.

Faulkner Fund to Aid Students

Final subscriptions are being received for the $10,000 fund which is being raised as a memorial to James W. Faulkner, for many years political correspondent of the Cincinnati Enquirer, who died in New York more than a year ago. The fund will be used to aid students in journalism. Subscriptions of from $1 to $5 from working newspaper men are now being sought.

Prints 84 Pages of Roto

The Miami (Fla.) Tribune on Feb. 6, issued an 84-page rotogravure and statistical edition presenting aeroplane views of cities, beach and lake scenes, and showing the residences, hotels and business blocks under construction and completed in the various towns and cities.

TRADE BOARD ORDERS CALUMET CEASE ANONYMOUS ATTACKS ON COMPETITORS

Circulation of Physician's Book, Hidden Authorship of Magazine Articles, and Salesmen's Attacks Against Patent Flour Forbidden

By J. BART CAMPBELL

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 16.—In a Federal Trade Commission decision, the Calumet Baking Powder Company, Chicago, is ordered to discontinue preparing and calculating among the trade and consuming public, articles of anonymous authorship disparaging the wholesomeness of self-rising flour or the use thereof. The order also prohibits the Calumet company from employing professional or other writers publicly to disparage the wholesomeness of self-rising flour, and to circulate such articles under the name or names of the writers so employed and withholding or concealing from the trade and consuming public such employment.

The Commission found that the respondent company secured the services of one Dr. Thomas Atkinson, in preparing a book entitled "Domestic Science Text Book, Baking Powder, A Healthful Leavening Agent." Dr. Atkinson received a fee from respondent for surrendering to it all right, title and interest in the book, although no record of such assignment was made in the United States Copyright Office. The publication of the book, however, was at all times subject to the control and at the expense of the respondent. The book was written for the use of domestic science teachers, a number of editions having been published. It was further found that respondent's salesmen and demonstrators distributed nearly 14,000 copies of the book, and although some of the latest copies printed contained labels stating that the book was the property of the Calumet Company, no mention was made concerning the facts of its authorship. Dr. Atkinson's book, the findings continue, contains disparaging statements concerning self-rising flour, such statements later being used by an employee of the respondent company in preparing a book entitled "Twenty Lessons In Domestic Science." This book was also distributed by respondent.

It was also found that the respondent circulated in a monthly magazine for women, and concealed its authorship of the same, articles advising against the use of self-rising flour.

According to the findings, the Commission has taken judical notice of the provisions of the acts of Congress known as the Pure Food and Drug Act, and of similar laws passed by the various states designed to protect the public against the sale and consumption of deleterious, unwholesome or adulterated food products; also that self-rising flour is sold freely and extensively in commerce and in territories which are subject to such laws.

The findings further state that the Calumet Company's concealment, as an interested party, of its activities in circulating disparaging articles on self-rising flour, handicapped manufacturers of self-rising flour in defending their product; and further that such articles prepared at the expense of the respondent, contained numerous statements adverse to self-rising flour which involved complex matters of opinion, either scientific, medical or commercial, and incapable of determination by the uniformed trade or consuming public; and further that respondents complete anonymity in its attacks prejudiced the trade and public against self-rising flour to a greater degree than had respondent fully disclosed and identified itself as the active and interested agent in the preparation and circulation of such attacks.

A. P. USED RADIO IN STORM

Portland Oregonian Station Broadcast News When Wires Went Down

When wires went down during a storm along the Oregon coast, the Associated Press called radio into service to send its news to Marshfield on Coos Bay, some 300 miles from Portland. A commercial wireless company in Portland first notified the United States Navy radio station at Cape Blanco that the news was to be sent and advised the Marshfield papers to have some amateur station stand by for the report.

The A. P. report was forwarded by KGW, the Portland Oregonian station. It was picked up by the Coos Bay Times at an amateur station, in its entirety. Soon after it was sent to the Bend (Ore.) Press, half-way across the state. Marshfield also reported that it had picked up the broadcast news dispatches in good shape.

DEMAND CAUSED CREATION OF SCHOOL TO TEACH GEORGIAN NEWS MEN

University of Georgia, Henry W. Grady School, Offers 15 Separate Courses in Journalism—Efforts Made to Link Theory With Practice—Local Daily Helps.

By JOHN E. DREWRY

(This is eighth in a series of articles, interpreting the work of schools of journalism to editors of the nation.)

THE department of journalism at the University of Georgia, Athens, Ga., was authorized by the board of trustees of the institution in 1915, and was changed to the Henry W. Grady School of Journalism in 1921. The school was created in response to a demand for courses in a Southern university designed to aid students in a journalistic career.

Fifteen separate courses in journalism are being offered by a faculty of three full time journalism instructors, all of whom have had practical experience in newspaper work or writing. The four years' work leads to the degree of bachelor of arts in journalism.

Reporting, copy reading, editing, special articles and magazine work, editorial writing, newspaper ethics, book reviewing, advertising, the country newspaper, and the history of journalism are the essential journalism subjects taught in the University of Georgia. In addition to these purely journalistic subjects, candidates for the journalism degree are required to pursue courses in English, history, sociology, political science, modern languages, science, psychology, education, economics, mathematics, etc. The school of journalism aims to lay a broad foundation of knowledge that will fit the student with expert information, so essential for journalistic work.

In the journalistic courses an effort is made to link theory with practice. In the class in reporting, the instructor frequently acts as city editor, sending his students out on the same assignments that reporters on the Athens paper would be required to go for news. All the regular city beats, as well as additional ones on the University campus, and on the campus of the State Agricultural College, are covered by these students in the reporting class. Through a local arrangement, much of the copy written by the reporting class is published in the Athens Banner-Herald. When conventions or conferences are held in Athens, either out in the city or at one of the educational institutions, members of the reporting class work directly under the supervision of the city editor of the Athens paper.

The copy reading class is provided with live newspaper copy, some of which comes from students in the reporting class, some from the news associations, and some of which is prepared by the faculty of the school so as to include the various kinds of errors for which copy readers should be taught to be on the look-out. The copy reading class has its style sheet, just as most newspaper offices have. Its members are taught headline writing, their models being the headlines in representative Southern newspapers, and newspapers from other sections. They are also instructed in newspaper make-up, and a part of the course consists in a critical analysis of a selected group of papers.

In the editorial writing course, again practice is combined with theory. Subjects for editorials are assigned, and when written these editorials are criticized both in class and in private by the instructor in charge. Editorial pages of the newspapers are subjected to examination, and emphasis is placed on the difference in make-up of an editorial page for a city paper and that for a country paper.

In the magazine and special article classes, students make a critical study of the leading magazines, their policies, histories, contents, accomplishments, and needs from the standpoint of material. The instructor, after the students have studied a magazine using about 25 questions about the periodical provided by the instructor, supplements their findings with a lecture on the periodical. Students are assigned subjects for special articles, which are frequently rewritten after ciricism. University of Georgia journalism students have been rather successful in selling a good many of their special articles to Sunday magazines and periodicals.

In the ethics course, the case method is employed. In the advertising instruction, there is much practical work, just as in the other courses, and students are constantly writing advertising copy and making advertising lay-outs. In the other journalism courses, not specifically mentioned, it is the aim of the School of Journalism faculty to combine theory with practice, each supplementing the other.

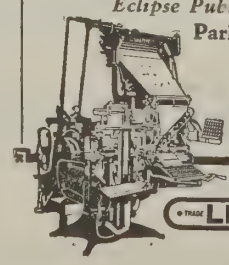
The staff of the Red and Black, University of Georgia weekly newspaper, is composed largely of journalism students, and through this much additional practical experience is gained. Several of the journalism students are correspondents for the larger papers (Atlanta, Macon, and Augusta principally), covering sporting and collegiate news. Once each year, the Athens Banner-Herald turns its entire plant over to the School of Journalism, and the students do everything in connection with the publication of a day's issue, except the mechanical work.

The faculty of the Henry W. Grady School of Journalism is composed of S. V. Sanford, A. B., Lit. D., head of the School and professor of journalism and English language; John E. Drewry, A. B., B. J., A. M., adjunct professor of journalism; and Paul W. Chapman, B. S., instructor in agricultural journalism.

FEARS OVER-PRODUCTION

Increase of 600,000 Tons of Newsprint Expected in Canada in Next Two Years

Analyzing the newsprint situation in Canada, a writer in the Toronto Globe, while admitting the strength of the present position, queries the outlook two years hence. The market, he says, has been able to take care easily of an increase averaging about 21,000 tons a year. But the new machines that will be installed in Canada by the end of 1927, will mean an additional production of 600,000 tons a year and the question arises how this will affect the high cost producers. The Canadian capacity will be raised from 1,500,000 to 2,100,000 tons per annum. On a conservative estimate between 25 and 30 machines capable of turning out an average of 75 tons a day apiece will be in operation within the next two years.



International Paper will have four machines in its new mill at Chelsea by the spring of 1927, raising that company's Canadian equipment to 12 machines and capacity from 800 to 1,200 tons a day. The Kimberley-Clark Company will have six machines with 500 tons capacity in its new mill at Kapuskasing. The Abitibi Company is increasing capacity from 500 to 750 tons daily. The Nipigon Company under the terms of its agreement with the Ontario Government must be producing 50,000 tons a year by the end of 1927. The Port Alfred Company is adding two machines with 150 tons capacity. The Rothermere interests are building a four-machine plant in Quebec. St. Lawrence Paper is adding two machines, raising annual capacity from 60,000 to 120,000 tons. The Manitoba Company will have at least two machines running and possibly four. And there are other developments in prospect.

LIBEL SUIT DROPPED

Plaintiff Fails to Prosecute Charge Against Colorado Springs Dailies

A libel suit for $75,000 damages against the Colorado Springs (Col.) Gazette and Telegraph instituted in May 1925, by J. A. Merritt, was dismissed recently in district court when Merritt failed to prosecute the case. The suit was the outcome of a bitter Klan fight in the spring elections in 1925 when Merritt was active in Klan political circles and was charged with making false statements by the newspapers, which fought and defeated the Klan in two elections.

Another libel suit in Colorado Springs is due for trial late in February. Sheriff S. R. Berkley sued the Colorado Springs Independent, a weekly, for $10,000 damages for libel, over attacks made on him. The Independent is a local Klan organ.

They Don't Commute in Northern Ohio!

They Don't Want to— They Can't!

PEOPLE living outside the 35-mile radius don't want to commute to Cleveland because they can buy good merchandise in the good stores of the good cities in which they live.

People living outside the 35-mile radius don't commute to Cleveland because of slow, inconvenient train schedules and expensive train fares.

Such authorities as Editor and Publisher (see above reproduction from the "1925 Space Buyer's Guide"), Audit Bureau of Circulations, Cleveland Bell Telephone Company, the 22 leading Cleveland retail stores, and 45 of Cleveland's leading wholesalers and jobbers AGREE with The Cleveland Press that The Cleveland Market is the City of Cleveland and that territory within 35 miles of Public Square.

It might be "nice" if that market covered more territory. But that's a Chamber of Commerce job. You with your advertising can't hope to extend The Cleveland Market beyond its natural boundaries—boundaries fixed by transportation facilities and the inclination of people living outside the city limits to trade in Cleveland, rather than some place else, or vice versa.

The Press is the First Advertising Buy in Cleveland

—because The Press has the largest city circulation, largest True Cleveland market circulation, largest total daily circulation in all Ohio, and publishes most advertising—at lowest milline rate.

Everybody who really KNOWS about the Cleveland situation has had something to say in an interesting booklet recently published. Write for your copy.

EDITORIAL

Better is the end of a thing than the beginning thereof: and the patient in spirit is better than the proud in spirit.—Ecclesiastes, VII; 8.

"CRIMINAL CONTEMPT"

IT is no new thing in American law or American journalism that an editor is cited for contempt of court, then tried and sentenced by the judge who cited him, with no disinterested jurist or jury intervening. Some of the most eminent editors of the present age have paid fines and even gone to jail for the publication of honest opinion which offended the Bench. Often the offending news or comment was not uttered in the presence of the court, nor upon matters pending before the court, but upon matters that the court had decided and concluded. The court is the sole arbitrator of its own honor.

Numerous judges during the past five years have also cited, tried, and punished editors for what they termed "constructive contempt," a sort of legal omnium gatherum, which in effect extends the jurisdiction of the court far beyond that read in the strict language of the statutes and probably far beyond the imaginations of the legislators who enacted them. It is a thoroughly vicious and destructive doctrine. Neither constructive contempt nor autocratic assumption of the functions of judge, jury and prosecutor by a man temporarily wearing a judge's robes have any place in American jurisprudence. It was good sense and good law that Charles Evans Hughes uttered this week in his successful defense of Harold S. Pollard, editor of the New York Evening World, haled to court on a contempt charge based on his editorial criticism of a judge's decisions.

"I yield to no one in the desire to see the administration of justice maintained," said Mr. Hughes, "but it cannot be maintained by any arbitrary action in a proceeding for criminal contempt. If a man in a newspaper office, fairly, and on facts which he got from the highest source, criticizes a judge for his decision—he thinks it is not right, the judge thinks it is right—how does the judge tell? This is a free country. A man cannot be examined by a judge who who is both judge and jury himself and be put under a criminal sentence in a case of this sort if he has acted fairly."

Mussolini's Roman police arrested a chauffeur for protecting his car's radiator with a newspaper, charging an "esthetic misdemeanor." Covering the kitchen shelves may be a felony under "Il Duce's" benevolent code.

SHARP WORK

AN advertising agency went out of business a few months ago. It had placed advertising for several important manufacturers in small daily papers throughout the country and its accounts payable ran into the thousands of dollars when the end came. Some months later, one of its former principals communicated with publishers, stating that he had assumed payment of outstanding bills as a personal obligation and had already expended a large part of his fortune to liquidate the affairs of the agency. Would the publisher accept 25 cents on the dollar, all things considered, and call it square?

Some publishers no doubt took the loss and closed the account rather than enter a long discussion over an amount that rarely exceeded $50. One publisher, however, decided that he had earned the amount of his bill and that he was going to collect it. He ignored the plea for a 75 per cent rebate and wrote directly to the manufacturer for whom the advertising had been placed. Promptly replying, the manufacturer declared that the agency had been paid in full before the dissolution and that he would see that the publisher received his full dues from the agent without further delay.

A few days later the publisher received the former agent's check for the entire bill.

This publisher is not an A. N. P. A. member, and could not call upon its resources of information and moral suasion over delinquent agencies. The agency was not a member of the Agencies' Association nor was it "recognized" by the A. N. P. A. as one to whom credit should be extended and commissions paid. If the opposite had been true in either case, the publisher would have been certain that the last possible cent of his bill would have been paid without further trouble on his part.

The newspaper publisher needs all the assistance that his organizations can give him when an advertising agent begins evading his lawful debts, for the combination that won for the newspaper in this case—a resolute publisher, an honest and financially strong advertiser and a "retired" agent who would pay the bill, even unwillingly, under the circumstances—that is a rare combination indeed.

Some smart advertiser may find a counterfeit coin to beat the Minneapolis newspapers' "gas meter" on automobile press agentry.

THE UNITED STATES DAILY

IT is a wholly new venture in journalism that is contemplated by David Lawrence and his associates in the United States Daily. It is the 1926 descendant of the old Official Gazettes that were first published by the Ming Emperors of China 500 years ago to tell those concerned what the rulers thought they ought to know. But the new daily at Washington will not be an official gazette. It purposes to be a report of what the elected and appointed rulers of the United States are doing day by day, as seen, heard and written by trained newspaper men. The announced policies are sound and the newspaper which they will guide should be of the highest interest and assistance to editorial executives of the regular daily press. The matter-of-fact reports of the United States Daily should turn up many a news and editorial lead now overlooked in the overwhelming press of Washington affairs.

The ability and integrity of the men named to conduct the paper are well known to newspaper makers and are a guarantee that it will not fall into any of the numerous errors that would mean its destruction. The well-wishes of the newspaper profession and industry attend the newcomer's advent.

Giving your town the cheapest newspaper it will tolerate is an engraved invitation to competition.

MILLIONS—AND MORE—AT STAKE

IF you were given a million dollars today, what would you do with it?

There's a question which has made types click and presses roar and tongues clack since the first million was put together. Editors have often asked it, but never until now have they been pressed for the answer.

The editors may have one million, maybe five or ten millions of dollars worth of Florida land, the gift of Col. Charles D. Haines to the International Press Foundation. It is theirs without strings, to do with as they please, and, according to the testimony of expert newspaper men, without fear that they or their newspapers are being used to exploit the public for private gain.

Mr. Haines has a magnificent dream that the press of the world will find a central meeting point under the palms and round the lakes that beautify the property he has donated. He sees future beautiful buildings representing the states of the union and the civilized nations, housing the activities of the organized press. He visions a cozy cottage in his Elysium for the newspaper man who has given his life's energy for public good through journalism. He dreams of world peace enforced by the united opinion of journalists who know the mind of the world's many peoples. He believes that the press can easily find the money and the will to make his vision a reality.

None of this is implied or stated in the contract. It is Mr. Haines' conception of what might be done. What will be done is in the hands of the newspaper men loosely represented in the "International Press Foundation." At present those three words are hardly more than a title, the sign on an empty house.

There is no need to dwell here upon the difficulty of obtaining forceful co-operative action from the newspapers or newspaper men of the country. The individualism of the editor and the publisher has the defects of its qualities, and it is the most important obstacle to the beneficent use of this stupendous gift. Yet it is not insuperable, we think.

With the diversity and number of craft and geographical groups in the business, several months will pass before opinions can be expressed and compiled in truly representative volume. Some progress has already been made in this direction—practically every state press association has approved the idea "in principle." It is the detail of development from which diverse opinions will spring.

Most careful thought and discussion should be given this breath-taking project by every gathering of newspaper people. The opinions of hundreds of organizations must be crystallized before a committee can be formed with powers of concrete development.

If the seething pot of today's dream-stuff simmers down to a realization of a great resort, retiring place, and meeting headquarters for newspaper men of the Americas—and that is not at all fantastic—the net gain to journalism is great. Even the least ambitious use of this "million dollar legacy" deserves the long, prayerful and unselfish thought of the men who make the newspapers.

Add tabloid reader's vocabulary—"Moral Turpitude."

"A FOOL'S PARADISE"

THIS excerpt from a recent news report in Tobacco of a meeting of a co-operative farmers' organization in the South Atlantic region needs no comment:

"As the co-op situation develops the policy of the pool in maintaining a press bureau at Raleigh is revealed as a mistaken one. Through the Raleigh bureau for three years the baldest form of press agentry has been practiced. Prepaid news telegrams at one-third of a cent a word have seen sent out to scores of papers in the tobacco belt, the pool paying for these. The news favorable to the pool has been played up. There have been omissions of vital news which was legitimate property for the association members. The view prevails among many that the farmers have been living in a fool's paradise."

FOLKS WORTH KNOWING

J. C. HARPER, who was first president of the Dallas (Tex.) Dispatch, returned to Dallas recently from his present home in La Jolla, Cal., to act as host at a party given to old newspaper friends.

J. C. Harper

Harper was general counsel of the Scripps-McRae newspapers and allied organizations at the time of the organization of the Dallas Dispatch and one of the paper's original stockholders. In its earlier years he frequently visited Dallas on business connected with the paper.

In recognition of the kindly interest and friendshsip which Harper has always had for those connected with the Dispatch, his guests surprised him with the presentation of a bronze vase, silver-ornamented and fittingly inscribed.

Lewis W. Bailey, editor of the paper, introduced Charles H. Newell, vice president of the company, who made the presentation.

Harper now is trustee of Pomona College, Claremont, Cal., director of the Scripps Hospital and Metabolic Clinic in La Jolla, and has other connections of importance.

Most Persons Don't Read a Paper—They LOOK at It!

THAT'S why features like the World's Best Picture Page, and the weekly full-page Sports Pictorial, both produced by the Central Press Association, make circulation. They're newsy and largely exclusive in content, but they're also made up with consideration for attractiveness, so that they're irresistible to the eyes of readers of all classes whether they are fans.

Central Press' daily pictorial is used by more newspapers than any other picture page. And it's clean. It keeps its timeliness. It is an important feature of such important papers as the St. Paul Dispatch, Pittsburgh Chronicle Telegraph, Buffalo Courier, Birmingham News, San Jose Mercury-Herald, Kansas City Journal-Post and more than 50 others.

The weekly sports pictorial, a distinctive Central Press feature, shipped from Cleveland for Saturday or Sunday publication, is proving its value in such newspapers as Tulsa World, New Orleans Item, Pueblo Chieftain, Pasadena Post, Atlanta Constitution, Columbus Dispatch, Springfield (Mass.) Republican, Louisville Courier-Journal, Cincinnati Commercial-Tribune and 20 others.

Both are available in eight columns, any depth. Let us send you three issues without charge.

KNIGHT CERTIFIED DEVELOPMENT PLANS

What Is Behind Circulation?

Mere circulation statements fall as far short of describing a newspaper's delivering power as the physical measurements of a man fail in describing his earning capability.

The true description of a newspaper is found in the homes of its reader-families.

We have provided certified descriptions of scores of newspapers from the ECONOMIC family standpoint showing:

Reader Acceptance — Coverage Duplication
Reader Buying Ability — Response to Advertising

—many emphatic truths that present newspaper values in a new light.

The details make an engrossing account for newspaper executives. A request on your letterhead will bring them to you at no charge.

WHAT'S WHAT IN THE FEATURE FIELD

Twentieth Century Version of Mid-Victorian Fairy Tales—New Business Feature Added to Associated Editors' List—"Two Minute Sermons," by Bishop Freeman

CHILDHOOD stories have been translated from Mid-Victorian English to the present day "flapper-Americanese" by Gregory Grin for the Ledger Syndicate, Philadelphia, and the results are being offered as weekly illustrated features under the heading "Grin's Fairy Tales." Preliminary announcements in mat form are being offered with the series.

An example of the "translation" reads:

"Soon Red Riding Hood entered.

"'How's tricks, Grandma? You look as cheerful as a cry for help,' exclaimed Red Riding Hood.

"'I feel like the retreat from Moscow. Last night's party sure knocked me for a row of Chinese pagodas,' said the wolf, mimicking the purity of speech and gentle tones of the Old Lady."

His purpose, says the author, is to make the old favorites "understandable to the youth of today and to save them for posterity."

The illustrations are also modernized.

"Your Business," a brief daily article on business administration, is being offered to newspapers by Associated Editors, Inc., Chicago. "Your Business" is prepared by the A. W. Shaw organization, publishers of System, from reports of the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration.

Bishop James E. Freeman, of Washington, D. C., is writing a weekly feature entitled "Two-Minute Sermons," for Editors Feature Service, New York. It is being distributed by Johnson Features, Inc.

Science and Invention, a monthly magazine, has sold the New York Evening World, exclusive rights to its matchcraft contest, originated by Hugo Gernsback, editor-in-chief.

John T. McCutcheon, Chicago Tribune cartoonist, has left for a six weeks' stay in the Bahamas.

A new daily children's feature, "Tree Top Stories," written and illustrated by Florenz Clark, has been released by Associated Editors, Inc., of Chicago. Mrs. Clark is an illustrator for children's books. "Tree Top Stories," appears in mat form.

Howard Wheeler, vice-president and general manager of the United Feature Syndicate, New York, is making a sales trip through the eastern territory. He will return to New York next week.

John F. P. Farrar has joined the sales force of Associated Editors, Inc., of Chicago, and is now on a tour of the middle west.

Jack Dempsey is telling his side of the argument with Jack Kearns, former manager, in a series of twelve articles signed with his name and distributed through King Features Syndicate, Inc., New York.

Noble Warrum, Salt Lake City feature writer and photographer, has joined the staff of the East-West-Photo-News Service in San Francisco.

A UNIVERSITY of Minnesota Extension class in retail advertising has opened in St. Paul, with 20 students attending. P. H. Rangere, advertising manager of the Montgomery Ward & Co. retail store, St. Paul, is the instructor.

Records of the department of journalism of the University of Oklahoma show that 129 former students and graduates of the school are engaged in journalistic work.

Marquette University College of Journalism, Milwaukee, Wis., is this semester offering a course in sport writing under Frank J. Murray, football and basketball coach. Before taking up athletic work Mr. Murray was on the staff of the Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

Gerald W. Johnson, professor of journalism at the University of North Carolina, has tendered his resignation and will join the editorial staff of the Baltimore Evening Sun at the close of the present scholastic year.

Editorial Staff Plans Dinner

Thirty-four men, members of the news staff of the Jersey City (N. J.) Journal, will hold their annual dinner in the Masonic Temple Feb. 27. Homer Harkness and Arnold Davidson are making the arrangements. Only editorial staff men have been invited.

Editor Wins Libel Action

Robert E. Davey, editor of the Newport (Ore.) Journal, has been vindicated by a Lincoln county grand jury. He had been accused of criminal libel for printing an article in which he accused the city recorder of fleecing tourists.

The quality of government we get for our money may not always please us so well as some we have bought before, but there's no denying that we get more of it. —Kansas City Star.

These Iowa Daily Newspapers have a combined rate of $1.77½. They offer a service to advertisers unique in its completeness. Ask for the "Iowa Plan."

What ARTHUR BRISBANE says about IOWA:

"THE cornfields of Iowa produce more wealth than all the gold mines of the country. The state knows no illiteracy, or, at least, less than any other state in the union. Its crops are worth a billion a year; the entire population, including all hired men, grandmothers and babies, could ride at the same time in Iowa automobiles."

That's what Arthur Brisbane says about Iowa. He might very well have added these striking statements:

Every family in Iowa takes a daily Iowa newspaper.

Iowa's eggs are worth more than all the oranges raised in the United States.

Iowa has no arid lands. It consists entirely of prosperous farms, thriving towns and bustling cities.

In short, the 2,400,000 people who live in Iowa form one of the greatest assemblies of intelligent and responsive buyers in the entire country.

You can sell them your product most quickly and economically by advertising in the medium they all read regularly—the daily Iowa newspapers!

Chesterfield Cigarettes Starts Big Newspaper Drive—"Five-Cent Cigar" Comes Back to Advertise—Ice Men to Tell Story in National Campaign

LIGGETT & MYERS COMPANY last week started a nation-wide 1926 advertising campaign for Chesterfield Cigarettes, using virtually every newspaper in the country. The account is placed by the Newell-Emmett Company, New York advertising agency.

A series of 12 different advertisements make up the drive, with the copy running four columns by 12 inches.

Other than announcing the Chesterfield promotion, Liggett & Myers' advertising officials declined to discuss advertising plans with EDITOR & PUBLISHER.

The company recently announced the best annual report in its history, showing a net profit of $17,028,474.78 in 1925.

The "Five-Cent Cigar" is back in the newspaper advertising columns. Using dailies in metropolitan centers, the General Cigar Company has launched a campaign to run from 25 to 35 weeks featuring the William Penn Cigar. Copy size ranges from 300 to 600 lines.

This campaign of Wm. Penn is said to be a direct consequence of the increase in business of the 5-cent cigar during 1924 and 1925. In 1925 over 3,000,000,000 of Class A cigars were smoked in this country, which represents an increase of practically 134,000,000.

The Wm. H. Rankin Company, handling the account, states:

"During the last year there has been a quickening of dealer acceptance of the 5-cent cigar. Forty-five per cent of cigar sales consist of Class A Cigars and this percentage is rising. More and more those who are awake to what is going on in the business, today, are stocking the 5-cent cigar—particularly the Wm. Penn—with confidence and enthusiasm.

"Co-incident with the start of the Wm. Penn campaign, the Wm. Penn cigar in most localities meets the trade in a new dress. It is featured in an attractive band. Also, for the first time Wm. Penn is being sold in boxes of 50 as well as 100.

"The newspaper campaign on Wm. Penn is the major effort in 1926 for this cigar. It is a nation-wide campaign. There are but a few regions of the country that are not covered by Wm. Penn advertising."

The story of ice and its necessity in American homes will be told in a nation-wide advertising campaign to cost $200,000, according to Leslie C. Smith, secretary of the National Association of Ice Industries, Chicago, who addressed the delegates to the Northwest Association of Ice industries which opened its two-day convention in Spokane, Feb. 10.

There were about fifty delegates present from all parts of Washington, Oregon, Montana, Idaho, and British Columbia. The advertising campaign which will be undertaken by the national association, will be designed to reach every second family in the United States, through the extensive use of space.

In informing the Northwest Ice Manufacturers of the demand which would be made upon them for this work, the successful campaigns of the laundry men, as well as the big dividends reaped by other industries through the effective use of paid-space was pointed out.

All General Motors divisions are enjoying a heavy volume of business, according to the Wall Street Journal, New York, which states that "probably the principal factors in the corporation's prosperity are the phenomenal gains registered by Buick and Chevrolet and the prospects for a large volume from the new low-priced six-cylinder Pontiac, placed in production late last year by the Oakland division."

The N. W. Ayer Advertising Company, Philadelphia, backed by New York banking interests is seeking a merger of the sardine industry in Maine, involving about $6,000,000, it was announced in Portland, Me., Feb. 16.

Official announcement was made in New York this week of the plan whereby the Electric Refrigeration Corporation becomes operative as a consolidation of the Kelvinator, Nizer, and Grand Rapids Refrigeration Corporation.

An increase of 10 per cent last year in the use of brick in Oregon and Washington is attributed to newspaper advertising. W. J. Howard, executive secretary of the Northwest Brick Manufacturers' Association so told his organization recently. The directors, as a result, decided to continue their advertising campaign with an increased appropriation.

KANSAS SEEKS TO BAR "IMMORAL" MAGAZINES

Permanent Injunction Hitting 13 Publications Asked by Wyandotte County Attorney—Publishers Made Defendants

(By Telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

KANSAS CITY, Kan., Feb. 16.—Harry Hayward, County Attorney of Wyandotte County, Kansas, went to court Feb. 16, to prevent the distribution in Kansas of 13 magazines which, he charged, contained immoral reading matter. Mr. Hayward filed an injunction suit in the district court in the name of the state, citing as defendants the publishers of the magazines and the proprietors of 55 drug stores, book stores and newsstands in Kansas City, Kan. No temporary restraining order was requested, and the ban against the magazines, if it is authorized by the court, will be in the nature of a permanent injunction.

The suit was filed under a Kansas law which prevents the circulation of publications of a "scandalous or lecherous" nature, or which deal with "intrigue between the sexes."

Among the magazines cited was La Vie Parisienne, an illustrated weekly published in Paris but circulated extensively in the United States. Another was the Smart Set, once edited by H. L. Mencken and George Jean Nathan as a semi-literary publication of a high order. La Vie Parisienne is distributed through Fawcetts Publications, New York. The Smart Set is now published by the Magus Magazine Corporation, New York.

Other magazines involved in the action and their publishers. Hi-Jinks, Guy F. Humphreys, St. Paul; Hot Dog, the Merit Publishing Company, Cleveland; Artists and Models, Ramer Reviews, Inc., New York; Art Lovers' Magazine, Art Publications, Inc., New York; True Marriages and My Story, Dell Publishing Company, Inc., New York; I Confess, Confess Publications, Inc., New York; Snappy Stories, True Fiction Publishing Company, New York; Calgary Eye-Opener, Bob Edwards Publishing Company, Minneapolis; Breezy Stories, C. H. Young Publishing Company, Inc., New York; Paris Nights, Fawcetts Publications, New York.

The court action does not apply to magazines circulated through the mail.

ADVERTISING AGENCY AFFAIRS

New Agency Started in New York—J. H. Neebe Appointed to Campbell-Ewald Company Executive Staff—Lord & Thomas Advance Strong

HAROLD A. CALAHAN, Everett Melvin Freystadt, and Francis Juraschek have started a new advertising agency in New York under the name of the H. A. Calahan Company, Inc.

Before entering this new enterprise, Mr. Calahan was associated with Calkins & Holden, Inc. Mr. Freystadt and Mr. Juraschek were formerly connected with the American Machine & Foundry Company, Brooklyn, the latter being advertising manager.

J. H. Neebe has been appointed to the executive staff of the Detroit office of the Campbell-Ewald Company. Prior to his association with Campbell-Ewald, he was for two years with the C. C. Winningham Advertising Agency, Detroit.

He was vice-president of Dorrance, Sullivan & Co., in charge of both their Chicago and South Bend offices for two years and spent another year with this company in their New York offices. He acted as production manager of Lord & Thomas, Chicago, in charge of copy, art, layout and the printing departments, and for a period of five years was vice-president of Charles Daniel Frey Company, Chicago.

The Chicago office of Lord & Thomas announce the advancement of J. C. Strong to assistant to the general manager. He has been with the agency for several months.

Arnold-Kraft, recently incorporated advertising firm, opened offices in Seattle, Feb. 1, in the Dexter-Horton Building, and expects to engage in general advertising and merchandising practice, handling both retail accounts and complete campaigns for manufacturers. Besides the main office in Seattle the firm will maintain a service office in San Francisco.

F. Claude Arnold has had advertising experience in Seattle, San Francisco, Chicago, and Washington, D. C. Warren E. Kraft, graduate of the University of Washington School of Journalism, has for the last six years been with Botsford-Constantine Company.

Robert C. Wilson, Jr., has joined the staff of the Dauchy Company, Inc., New York. For the past two years Mr. Wilson has been a member of the advertising staff of National Geographic Magazine. Previous to that he was connected with the editorial department of the New York Evening Journal and the advertising department of Cosmopolitan Magazine.

The advertising agency of Edward N. Vose, Inc., has been consolidated with the Gotham Advertising Company, 114 Liberty street, New York City. Mr. Vose will continue with the Gotham agency.

The Buchen Company, Chicago, has made the following additions: Ralph G. Klieforth as assistant space buyer; Lawrence J. Condon, formerly assistant manager of the agency credit department of the Chicago Tribune, as head of the accounting department.

W. A. Lydiatt is withdrawing from the advertising agency field in Toronto and will devote himself to the development of Lydiatt's Book, a directory of Canadian publications, which he has issued annually for several years. He will also specialize in advertisement composition and printing for advertisers.

C. A. Packard, for two years advertising manager of the Purity Bakeries Corporation, has joined the staff of Grace & Holliday, Penobscot Building, Detroit. Mr. Packard has also previously conducted advertising agencies in Detroit and Flint.

John Allen Murphy has started an agency at 285 Madison avenue, New York.

L. J. Stahl, formerly with the art department of Barrows and Richardson, New York agency, has joined the staff of the art department of the Corman Company, Inc., advertising agency, New York.

The Canal Bank and Trust Company, New Orlean's largest bank, has appointed Bauerlein, Inc., advertising agency of New Orleans, to direct a national campaign. Magazines and newspapers will be used.

Officers of the John S. King Company, Inc., Cleveland advertising agency, elected at the recent annual meeting are: John S. King, president; C. A. Brinkman, first vice-president; K. L. Ede, second vice-president; John N. Wiley, secretary, and Edward King, treasurer.

Wimberly Advertising Agency, Inc., Fort Worth, Tex., has changed its name to the Winmberly-Hubbard Agency, Inc. Officers remain F. W. Wimberly, president; A. E. Hubbard, vice-president; and J. H. Wimberly, secretary and treasurer. The agency has opened a new office in the Bankers' Mortgage Building, Houston, Tex., with Max E. Shippee in charge. Mr. Shippee resigned as advertising manager of the Montgomery, Ward & Co., store at Fort Worth to accept the new post.

Aubrey Cossar and John Erle Davis, members of the advertising firm of Cossar & Davis, Louisville, are editing the Louisville Public, a new Republican paper recently started. Mr. Cossar is sheriff of Louisville.

Fred E. Windsor has resigned as executive secretary of the Advertising Club of St. Louis to become local sales manager of the General Outdoor Advertising Company, in St. Louis. The new club secretary has not been named. Mr. Windsor came to the club from the Chamber of Commerce and has been secretary for three years.

Harry E. Ostmark, for several years with the art department of H. K. McCann Company, New York, has joined the art department of the Corman Company, Inc., New York.

F. Albany Rowlatt, who some time ago affiliated his advertising agency business with that of Thornton Purkis, has severed his connection with Mr. Purkis and joined the E. Sterling Dean Agency, Toronto.

The L. S. Gillham Advertising Company, Salt Lake City and Los Angeles, has been awarded the contract for conducting the advertising campaign of the Salt Lake City Chamber of Commerce in 1926. About $40,000 will be spent on newspaper and magazine space and $8,000 for booklets and pamphlets.

Rudolph Guenther-Russel Law, financial advertising agents, 133 Cedar street, New York, have received from the New York Times for advertising placed during the month of January a bill of $82,227.27. This sum, which is the net amount charged to the agency after the reduction of the usual 10 per cent agency commission from the gross, represents, according to the Times' records, the largest bill ever charged to any advertising agency or advertiser on a monthly basis. Over 98 per cent of the sum was spent in financial advertising.

The firm of Guenther-Law, Inc., is devoted almost entirely to financial advertising.

Arnold Joerns Company, Chicago advertising agency, announces the following appointments to its staff: W. G. Joerns, C. E. Leslie, and B. E. Newnham.

Guy Brown Wiser has been appointed art director of the Robbins & Pearson Company, Columbus, O., advertising agency. He was formerly associated with the Studebaker Corporation of America.

B. C. Walsh and M. O. Terry, formerly of the Cleveland News, have started the Advertising Service Company, Cleveland.

Firm to Quit Using "Silkette"

The Federal Trade Commission has dismissed its complaint against Brand & Oppenheimer, Inc., of New York City, with Edwin W. Brand and Harry C. Oppenheimer named as partners in the corporation. The complaint was dismissed upon recommendation of the Commission's chief counsel, and a stipulation signed by the respondents and the Commission was accepted. In the stipulation it was agreed that the word "silkette" when used by respondent in designating a cotton fabric would be accompanied by words clearly indicating that such fabric was made of cotton. Commissioner Thompson dissented. The complaint charged the respondents with misleading the purchasing public by designating a mercerized cotton fabric as "silkette."

Churches Plan Easter Campaign

Churches in Genesee and Wyoming counties, N. Y., are planning a cooperative advertising campaign to run from now until Easter, urging all residents of those communities to attend church regularly. The campaign will be undenominational. A Buffalo Roman Catholic who does not sign his name is having published a daily series of advertisements in the Buffalo Express calling attention to the principles and tenets of that denomination.

in PENNSYLVANIA Is Local To Readers

What makes National Advertising NATIONAL?

Is it National because of the wide range of media employed?
Is it National because the product advertised has had nation-wide distribution?

How about a new product? It cannot be distributed over the entire country upon its initial appearance.

You would not advertise it beyond the territory of its distribution.

To create consumer demand in a try out territory, sales appeal must be made in a personal manner. There is no medium that gets closer to the heart than the daily newspaper.

National advertising in the newspapers is an offering, through local dealers, of merchandise that is manufactured for general use or consumption.

The retail merchants of Pennsylvania know the consumer demand of their separate communities to a certainty. They must satisfy that demand.

The Pennsylvania newspapers are familiar with the requirements of the local dealers.

There are great possibilities, in Pennsylvania, for the manufacturers of all products.

These newspapers will supply valuable cooperation.

R. R. GOVIN, PUBLISHER, DIES IN MONTE CARLO

Owner of Four Havana Dailies and N. Y. Journal of Commerce Succumbs to Heart Attack While Abroad

Rafael R. Govin, president and general manager of the New York Journal of Commerce and an officer in other enterprises, died unexpectedly of heart disease Sunday in Monte Carlo.

Mr. Govin went abroad early last month to join his wife, Mrs. May I. Medina Govin, who was traveling in Europe, and met her in Monte Carlo. Their daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. John D. Schoonmaker, who were in Paris, were expected to join them there later. Their son, Rafael R. Govin, Jr., is in Pittston, Pa., as president of the International Color Printing Company, which his father owned.

Mr. Govin was born in Matanzas, Cuba, 58 years ago. He was graduated from Columbia University in 1886 and then from the Columbia Law School. His earlier law associations were with Senator Eustis, Jones & Govin, and Coudert Brothers, international lawyers. He was long a broker, associated with H. R. Hollins & Co., which failed for a large amount two months after he withdrew in 1913. He had developed a large business in Mexican and Cuban investments for the firm.

He was a member of this firm when he went to Chicago in 1903 to represent J. Pierpont Morgan and other Eastern stockholders of the Union Traction Company.

He executed the details for the purchase of the Havana-American Tobacco Company and was at one time president of the New York Terminal Company. At one time he was interested in a rice plantation of several thousand acres in Yolo County, California.

Mr. Govin also owned four newspapers in Havana, Cuba, El Mundo, La Prensa, the Post, and the Evening Telegram. Until a few years ago he owned the Elmira (N. Y.) Telegram-Advertiser which he sold to the Gannett Newspapers, and also the Scranton (Pa.) Telegram and the Wilkes-Barre (Pa.) Telegram.

He was president and a director of the Inter-Ocean Oil Company, president and director of the United States Asphalt Refining Company and a director of the American Safety Razor Company. He acquired control of the New York Journal of Commerce a little more than two years ago.

His 50th anniversary as an Eagle man was celebrated on Feb. 23, 1923.

VETERAN POLITICAL WRITER DIES

Reginald Wilson, Widely Known Herald Tribune Legislative Correspondent Was a Confidant of President Harding

Reginald Wilson, legislative correspondent and political reporter for the New York Herald Tribune, died suddenly Feb. 12, in the railroad station in Albany, where he was about to take a train for New York to pass the week end at home. His death was due to an internal hemorrhage, and resulted indirectly from an attack of pleurisy suffered several years ago. He was in his forty-first year.

Mr. Wilson was born in Seaforth, Ont., and was educated in the public and high schools there. On his graduation he joined a detachment of British artillery stationed in Toronto and later took a position with a Toronto bank. In 1911 he went to Minneapolis for his first newspaper work, as reporter on the Minneapolis Tribune.

In 1913 he came to New York, joining the City News Association. After a year and one-half he went to the Evening Sun as political and editorial writer. He remained with the Munsey newspapers, after joining the Sun as assistant city editor and the Herald on its merger with that paper, almost continuously until the merger of the Herald and the Tribune, when he became political writer and Albany correspondent for the Herald Tribune.

His connection with the Munsey newspapers before 1924 was broken once for six months, when he acted as assistant here to Walter S. Bullock, of the London Times. On the Herald Tribune he covered the legislative session of 1925 and the current session. He accompanied Mayor Walker on his recent Southern trip.

During the 1920 Presidential campaign he traveled with President Harding and also remained with him at Marion, O., where he became a personal friend and confidant of the President. Later he traveled with Mr. Harding on his trip in the South. State and city political leaders of both parties constantly consulted him, both for his knowledge of politics and for his newspaper work. He was one of the best known legislative correspondents in the country. He was a Mason and a member of the Newspaper Club.

On June 10, 1913, Mr. Wilson married Miss Queenie Southgate, who survives him. His father, Lieut.-Col. Alex Wilson, and a sister, Margaret, both of Toronto, also survive.

Funeral services were held on Feb. 15 at the home of Mr. Wilson's father, 64 Oriole Road, Toronto, and the burial was in Toronto.

Fraternities and sororities at the University have again invited the newspaper men and women to be their guests while in Seattle. Registration for Institute Week will take place in the office of the School of Journalism on the campus.

Consumer Demand in INDIANA
Stimulates Dealer Interest

The chief interest in commercial movements at present centres in the probable course of Spring trade, and developments in this direction give rise to optimistic forecasts.

With the improved transportation facilities insuring prompt deliveries of goods in most instances, and with outputs at a high rate, there naturally is no pronounced pressure among buyers to contract far ahead; yet demands to cover future needs are broadening.

The increasing disposition to make forward commitments demonstrates that confidence is sustained, and there fortunately has been no departure from conservatism in mercantile channels, conditions being kept on a wholesale basis.

On this favorable report the manufacturer should promote sufficient interest in his merchandise to induce a larger volume of advance contracts from the buyers.

Create consumer demand by advertising in the daily newspapers. This will stimulate the sales and the interest of the local dealer and win his confidence in your product. It is the best possible sales promotion.

The readers of these Indiana papers are your potential customers.

AD CLUB HONORS CREW OF ROOSEVELT

Story of Antinoe Rescue Retold By Capt. Fried and Officers, Who Receive Engrossed Tribute

Capt. George Fried and the members of the President Roosevelt's rescue crew were guests of honor Tuesday at a luncheon at the Advertising Club. An engrossed tribute of the club to the hero-crew was read by Hector Fuller and presented to Capt. Fried. The main effort of each of the guests seemed to be to efface himself from the picture of heroism. Most assiduous in giving credit to another was Chief Officer Robert Miller, who was leader of every boat that set out from the Roosevelt.

Mr. Miller, in one of the briefest speeches delivered, paid Capt. Fried, the highest tribute the Roosevelt's commander has received here. It was known that Fried was in command during the rescue, and that he assumed responsibility, but how he shouldered that responsibility his chief officer told vividly.

Captain Fried had spoken. At the request of Grover Whalen, master of ceremonies, he had confined himself to the story of the rescue.

Then said Chief Officer Miller:

"Capt. Fried has told you of the rescue, but he has not told you of the part he played. He has not told you of his long hours on the bridge, of how he conducted himself and the work, and kept up the morale. There was not only the work to do, but he had passengers who annoyed him because they were anxious to get away.

"Throughout the whole time Capt. Fried was cool. He never lost his temper. His voice was always at a conversational tone. He never barked his orders. Because of his conduct of himself and the work, his crew was ready and willing at all times. There was never a grumble. That is why we effected the rescue. The things that Capt. Fried did were the biggest things in the whole world."

Mr. Whalen was introduced by Charles C. Green, President of the Advertising Club. Rear Admiral Charles Plunkett, the first speaker, criticized the apathy of the people toward the merchant marine. He said it required a disaster to wake them up to the fact that it is worth saving.

Charles H. Rossbottom, General Manager of the United States Lines, expressed pride in the work of the officers and men of the Roosevelt. He said he had sent a massage to Captain Fried to hang on and continue the work of rescue. The bulldog tenacity with which Capt. Fried did hang on, he declared, should be a lesson to all school children.

Mayor Walker, who followed Mr. Rossbottom, said:

"Your message to Captain Fried to hang on and let schedules be damned, to let failure come to the lines, if necessary, but save those people, is epochal. There is something in it free from dollars and cents, free from commercialism. Of course we are a busy nation, but thank God the dollar is not our god, as some persons would have us believe. And so another page is written."

NEW YORK UNIVERSITY

WASHINGTON SQUARE, NEW YORK

January 27, 1926

The New York Times:

Before my advertising classes, I always present The New York Times as the most typical example of a successful newspaper. It depends upon its news service to hold reader interest more completely than any other publication. It is my feeling that supplying news is the first purpose of a newspaper.

When entertainment features have to be added, it indicates to me that the readers are not held by the primary function which a newspaper should perform. The immense success of The Times seems ample proof that this policy is correct for a newspaper.

Typographically, The New York Times also offers the highest example to be had in newspapers. I have frequently asked members of my class to buy The Times when studying typographical arrangement, the handling of engravings and adaption of art to newspaper advertising.

Very truly yours,
HUGH E. AGNEW,
Professor of Advertising.

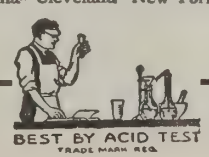
The Plus Plan Is at Work in Duluth

AND now Duluth, Minnesota, has appeared on the Imperial Plus Plan Map. In Duluth the Herald and News Tribune have selected the Plus Plan to service their type metal.

These splendid Minnesota Newspapers are aware of the fact that it's a real economy to have their type metal taken care of systematically. They know that type metal that is maintained to a high standard of efficiency is going to give years more of work than the metal that is permitted to run down and then corrective measures applied. Plus Plan users all over the country have found that the Plus Plan postpones the time when a new supply of metal is needed. These are the economies that have led thousands of publishers to select the Plus Plan.

If you were to go into the shops of thousands of the most progressive and prosperous newspapers in the country, you would find the Plus Plan being used. It fits into the shop plans of the small village weekly and the metropolitan daily equally well. That's why thousands of publishers have subscribed to the Plan.



When our representative calls, invite him in and have him tell you about the Plus Plan. He's always willing to give you the benefit of Imperial's experience with type metals.

PRIZES AWARDED AT ITHACA CONFERENCE

Nelson Antrim Crawford Chief Speaker at Seventh Annual Newspaper Gathering at Cornell University

The seventh annual Newspaper Conference, held at the State College of Agriculture, Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y., Feb. 12-13, provided helpful study of community newspaper problems for editors and publishers of the State. It was the seventh annual event, held in connection with Farmer's Week. It was decided to hold the 1927 conference in March or April, so it will not come so soon after the annual press association meeting in Syracuse.

A feature of the conference was the award of ribbons by Professor Bristow Adams for excellency among weekly papers in makeup, editorials and local news. The exhibit of papers was the largest yet held and editors had an opportunity to compare their papers with the winners in the various departments.

The winners were as follows:

Front page makeup—First, Cortland Standard; second, Fredonia Censor; third, Walton Reporter. Conservative type of makeup predominated. It was felt that better display of news characterized the papers shown this year, numbering more than 200.

Editorials—First, Rhinebeck Gazette; second, Liberty Register; third, Canton St. Lawrence Plain Dealer.

Local News—First, Boonville Herald; second, Riverhead County Review; third, Catskill Examiner.

Among the daily newspapers exhibited the awards were as follows:

The conference opened Friday with a discussion of news writing schools by Professor Adams. H. A. Stevenson of the MacMillan Company, New York, discussed "What the Farmers Read and Why." Russell Lord of Farm and Fireside, New York, discussed agricultural reading matter under the subject of "Tons of Taffy." The afternoon session was taken up by discussion of the newspaper awards. W. A. Gracey of the Geneva Times discussed "The Handling of Farm News."

The banquet in the evening was under the auspices of Sigma Delta Chi, journalism fraternity. Fay C. Parsons of the Cortland Democrat was toastmaster. President Livingston Farrand of Cornell University, in his welcome discussed the progress of the press from early times and the "improvement in tone on the part of the modern press." Professor Martin Sampson, head of the English department at Cornell, also spoke.

Nelson Antrim Crawford, in charge of the Office of Information of the United States Department of Agriculture, formerly of the Department of Journalism, Kansas State Agricultural College, gave the principal address on the subject, "The Press, the Public and Ethical Problems."

Criticism of the press under six specific heads was dealt with by Professor Crawford in his appeal for a clearer interpretation of American life and realities. These points were: inaccuracy, lack of proportion, sensationalism, suppression of news, coloring of news, and failure to present a clear picture of life.

Frederick H. Snyder, representing the Press Congress of the World, following a conference with Professor J. O. Simmons of the Department of Journalism at Syracuse University, secretary of the American Association of Teachers of Journalism, discussed the subject of the Congress to be held this year at Geneva, Switzerland, Sept. 14-18, and invited those present to attend.

The final session of the conference Saturday morning was opened by David S. Cook of the office of publication, state college of agriculture, who led discussion of "Quality in News." Jay W. Shaw, secretary of the New York State Press Association, described the progress of the organization of 230 members and its aims. Ross W. Kellogg, director of the Empire State School of Printing at Ithaca, told how that organization turns out trained printers and linotype operators, following which many editors went to Ithaca to inspect the school in operation.

OPERA WIRED FROM STAGE

Charles Talley Clicks Out Story of His Daughter's Metropolitan Debut

A former Associated Press telegrapher, Charles M. Talley, played a part in the debut of his daughter Marion Talley, 19, as Gilda in "Rigoletto" in the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, Feb. 17.

Just as the second act ended Miss. Talley's father was brought back-stage for a bit of cermony planned many hours in advance. It had been arranged that the story of his daughter's début should be sent by the Associated Press direct from the opera house. It was the first time an opera had been reported directly by telegraph wire from the wings. Marion's father is a former Associated Press telegrapher.

When "Rigoletto" was half way through, Mr. Talley, seated at the sending end of the wire 20 feet away from the scene of his daughter's performance, sent the first words that told "back home" the successful fulfillment of his dreams.

Among the flowers sent to the singer was a bouquet from the telegraph operators of the New York office of the Associated Press, with a note wishing "success to the daughter of Charles M. Talley." The operators' action was initiated by Joseph M. Finnerty, an operator who has been with the local office for 35 years.

Miss Vina Lindsay of the Kansas City Journal-Post attended the debut for her paper.

DAILY SPONSORS "KNOW TENNESSEE" CONTEST

$1,100 in Prizes and Cups Offered by Nashville Banner for Best Orations—Other Dailies Assisting

A "Know Tennessee" oratorical contest with $1,100 in prizes was announced Feb. 12 by the Nashville (Tenn) Banner after a preliminary state publicity campaign of several months' duration. The plan announced by the Banner contemplates divisional contests in East, Middle and West Tennessee on March 15, sponsored by several newspapers of each section, and conducted through the medium of Chambers of Commerce and luncheon clubs. A final contest will be held in Nashville on March 20, when the two winners of each of the three divisional contests will compete.

First prize will be $500 in gold and the Nashville Banner Trophy, a $125 silver loving cup. Second prize will be $250 in gold. Three $75 loving cups will be awarded to the divisional winners. All of the prizes will be given by the Banner.

The divisional contests to select speakers for the finals will be sponsored by the Knoxville Sentinel, Chattanooga News and Bristol Herald Courier in East Tennessee; the Banner and the Clarksville Leaf-Chroncile in Middle Tennessee; and the Jackson Sun in West Tennessee. A great deal of publicity favorable to Tennessee is expected to develop from the contest. It is believed by the Banner that public interest will justify featuring of the prize-winning "Know Tennessee" oration in every paper in the state. A mass of information relative to the resources of Tennessee, gathered by the Banner during the past year, will be made available to all individuals and clubs entering speakers in the contest. The promoters of the contest believe it will result in acquainting every Tennessean with the essential "talking points" of a true Tennessee booster.

LETTERS FROM OUR READERS

An Easily Scotched Evil

MANCHESTER, Conn.

To EDITOR & PUBLISHER: I have the greatest of respect and admiration for the EDITOR & PUBLISHER and for the work it is doing in the interests of the newspapers. Your work on the "free publicity" evil has been an eye-opener, and as a result of your campaign, we have cleared our daily of every line of the stuff.

I am writing you in regard to another evil which, I believe, you can give publicity to and receive an appreciable response. There are several advertisers, especially in the smaller cities and towns, who realize that newspapers are the best advertising mediums. However, they don't want to pay the price. These same advertisers have circulars printed, go to the newsdealers throughout the city, and pay to have their circulars placed in all the newspapers. We have forbidden newstands to place such circulars in our issues, threatening to withdraw our circulation from the stands if it is done.

But the newsdealers insert these circulars in New York, Boston and Hartford papers circulating here, and are paid for so doing. It seems to me that is illegitimate. These piker advertisers are benefiting by outside paper circulation at absolutely no revenue for these New York and Boston papers.

It strikes me that the circulation managers of these outside papers could do all papers a good turn by simply informing all newsdealers that they must not insert circulars in their newspapers. It would simply force the pikers to either abandon this illegal means of circulating their advertisements, or do as they ought, advertise in the newspapers.

Fire Insurance Advertising

NEWARK, N. J.

To EDITOR & PUBLISHER: At the suggestion of Frederick N. Sommer Advertising Agency of Newark, I am writing to comment briefly on the editorial "Advertising Opportunity" in your issue of Jan. 23.

It is a fact, as you point out, that "the average man buys fire insurance wholly on faith." He takes what the agent offers, usually without question or scrutiny. Often he doesn't even know the name of the company in which he is insured. It is also true, as you further remark, that "Companies that have special advantages to offer rarely advertise the fact, and this vast business, so far as the average citizen is concerned, is done in the dark." This peculiar situation in the fire insurance field, as you suggest, offers to independent fire insurance companies, out to cover the field in a great way, an unusual opportunity to employ newspaper advertising for the purpose of educating insurance buyers.

The Guaranty Fire Insurance Company of New Jersey is an independent company, has special advantages to offer, and proposes to advertise this fact extensively through the medium of the newspapers. Instead of depending on the usual agency and brokerage channels for the purpose of reaching the public and attracting business, this company will employ chiefly mail and advertising methods.

The special features of the Guaranty Fire Plan which it will bring to the attention of the public by means of mail and newspaper advertising are, in brief: (1) It deals direct with its policyholders—not through agents and brokers: (2) It writes only buildings under fire department protection, and accepts no insurance on mercantile stocks or contents involving a "moral hazard"; (3) It gives its policyholders a large share of the savings guaranteed by this plan of direct-dealing and selective writing in the form of a 25 per cent reduction of their premium rates; (4) It admits its policyholders to ownership in the company and participation in its profits by permitting each policyholder to invest his insurance saving for the first year in the stock of the company.

The economy of the direct-dealing method should make an instant appeal to insurance buyers. Everyone knows that the acquisition cost under the agency system is grossly excessive. This admitted evil is the subject of anxious discussion at gatherings of insurance executives and conventions of supervising officials. The average commission and agency expense for stock fire insurance companies amounts to approximately 25 per cent of the premiums year after year. That is, 25 cents of every $1.00 of premium paid for fire insurance is spent by the companies simply to get the business on their books. On certain lines of business much higher rates of commission are frequently paid. In some cities the companies are now paying commissions of 40 per cent or more. A former insurance superintendent of one of the large states informed the writer that he had seen instances of commissions of 80 per cent in the reports of stock fire insurance companies made to his office.

In consequence of the high commissions paid by stock fire insurance companies, their operating expenses consume nearly one-half of the premiums. No intelligent person can deny that so high a ratio of operating expense to income is an unhealthy condition in any business. In the year 1924 the ratio of management expenses to premiums on all the business written by stock fire insurance companies was 46 per cent. The ratio of losses to premiums was 53 per cent. This left an indicated underwriting profit of only 1 per cent. It thus appears that the companies spent almost as much for operating expenses as for losses. In terms of dollars and cents, this proportion of expenses to losses means that it cost about 87 cents to pay $1.00 of losses in the fire insurance business. Obviously, this is grossly excessive. To put the matter differently, the companies are charging the public about $1.89 for $1.00 fire insurance protection. Clearly this is most exorbitant.

The direct-dealing plan of the Guaranty Fire Insurance Company eliminates the usual commission and agency expense, reduces acquisition cost to a minimum, and passes on the saving to the public in the form of a 25 per cent reduction from the usual tariff rates. It is believed that the public will appreciate this advantage when it is properly presented through systematic mail and newspaper advertising. The problem of the Guaranty Fire in reaching the public and building its business is really one of judicious advertising. The directors of the company recognize this fact, and have arranged for the expenditure of $200,000 in advertising the Guaranty Fire Plan.

Thinking that this statement may be of some interest to you and to your readers, in the light of your recent editorial, I remain,

F. SPENCER BALDWIN,
President.

One Girl Equals Twin Boys?

WORCESTER, Mass.

To EDITOR & PUBLISHER: I am in receipt of my EDITOR & PUBLISHER for Feb. 6 and I am surprised, astounded, astonished, perturbed, confounded and bewildered to learn, under the head of "Folks Worth Knowing," or "Special Editions," or "Week's Ad Tips," or some such column, that Mrs. Sibley (the wiff) and I are the proud parents of twin boys.

Sir, they may be worth knowing, but I don't know them. They may be ad tips, but the tipsters are wrong. They may be special editions, but I don't think so.

Furthermore, sir, as far as I am able to learn through close association with all the facts, including one hospital bill and one physician's statement (paid), they ain't twins. She's a girl! And there's only one of her!

I demand a recount.

Omniscient Uncle Sam

CANAAN, Conn.

To EDITOR & PUBLISHER: I read in EDITOR & PUBLISHER recently of a subscriber who paid a bill 46 years old. This reminds me of a little incident that occurred while I was employed on the Litchfield (Conn.) Enquirer several years ago. Little attempt was made there to collect from subscribers who ignored bills sent out annually, and if the subscriber happened to be classified as "good" in the estimation of the editor, the subscription might never be paid.

One such subscriber, as I now recollect, was a "good" one and owed for about 25 years. She spent her summers in Litchfield and lived in New York during the winter months. Finally "30" was written after her name and the Enquirer failed to take her name from the mailing list. Several weeks later we received word from the New York post office to the effect that if we would attach a one-cent stamp the paper would be forwarded to the lady's address!

I've often wondered how they knew which way she went!

Four Generations Here?

ADRIAN, Mich.

To EDITOR & PUBLISHER: I must correct your impression expressed in the concluding sentence of an item in EDITOR & PUBLISHER for Feb. 6, page 12, and headed "Three Generations Publish Paper."

The Jeffersonian Democrat (Brookville, Pa.), one of the oldest and best weekly newspapers in western Pennsylvania, was purchased shortly after the Civil War by Major John McMurray, who published the newspaper for at least 30 years. Upon his death the business was conducted by his sons, Harry and Archie McMurray. Upon the death of Harry McMurray, his two sons, John J. and Eugene, purchased Archie McMurray's share, and are now conducting the newspaper. It is now and has been constantly improving.

Looking into the future I believe it is safe to predict that a fourth generation will eventually publish and edit the paper as Eugene has two sons who have already succumbed to the smell of printers' ink.

Northwest cities will again be linked in advertising copy to start in March and attract the Maytime tourists to the "Evergreen Playground," which includes Seattle, Bellingham, Tacoma, and two British Columbia cities—Vancouver and Victoria. There will be $37,000 spent in the joint publicity campaign. An effort will be made to have the Alaskan tourist stop in the Northwest enroute to the Northland. At the recent meeting at Vancouver, Harold Crary of Seattle was elected secretary treasurer. The name of the association backing the campaign has been changed to Puget Sounders and British Columbians, Associated.

'procuring' or pandering that may have been all right in the underworld in the old days, but it has no place in our economic life today.

"The glib-tongued oily-haired gentry that brazenly go about telling how they can get their stuff in the news columns of the press without paying for it, are no better than the burglar that goes into your business office and cracks your safe, for he's stealing from you the only thing you've got that has any intrinsic value—your news space, and burglary is burglary wherever you find it."

John F. D. Aué, publisher of the Burlington (Ia.) Hawk-Eye discussed the farm situation, declaring that the time has arrived when the farmer must get the same square deal in business that the Eastern manufacturers are receiving.

"As matters now stand, the Iowa farmer sells everything on the open market and buys everything on a protected market and it doesn't work," he declared. "It is therefore necessary that the other industries be brought down to somewhere near the level of the farming industry or the farming industry must be raised to somewhere near the level of the other industries or the farmers cannot be happy."

"Scientific Newspaper Management" was the topic of W. R. Ronald publisher of the Mitchell (S. D.) Evening Republican. Scientific management requires first of all a cost accounting system so efficient that a publisher can pre-determine costs and income, he declared. This must be accompanied by a strict budget system, both as to expense and revenue.

"I maintain that there should be no confusion whatever between the cost of the advertising portion of the newspaper and the reader portion of it," he stated. "It is sound cost accounting to require the reader to pay only for his part of the newspaper and once this is accomplished, an increase in circulation may be made at going subscription rates with a profit upon the individual subscription. In our case, we are able to show a margin of over 100 per cent over cost of handling an additional mail subscription and this is one of the reasons why we have been able to develop our circulation so successfully. We used no spectacular methods but we were proceeding on the basis of cost and revenue and that is, of course, the surest ground that could be provided."

Mr. Ronald's Evening Republican is said to be the only newspaper in a town of 10,000 having a circulation in excess of 10,000.

Women love a paper which serves them as a trade journal in their home-keeping, Mrs. Florence Riddick Boys, wife of Samuel E. Boys, publisher of the Plymouth (Ind.) Evening Pilot, told Inland members.

"They are constantly on the lookout for new ideas which will help them make their homes more beautiful, dress the children with more taste and economy, feed the family more wholesomely, save backaches and steps in laundry and kitchen, and make life finer and more worthwhile," she said.

"If a woman likes a certain paper, that paper is likely to become the home paper. In four cases out of five, the woman decided which shall be the home paper. The average man is good to his wife. What she wants for the home, she gets.

"What every paper craves is to become the 'home paper,' a situation which does not just happen, but is brought about. The 'home paper' is the one which is interesting to the woman in the home."

Tuesday's luncheon turned into a celebration in honor of E. P. Adler of the Lee Syndicate, and publisher of the Davenport (Ia.) Times, a former president of Inland, who recently celebrated his twenty-fifth anniversary with what has since become the Lee Syndicate. Speeches were made by J. F. D. Aue, publisher of the Burlington (Ia.) Hawk-Eye, by I. U. Sears and Frank Burgess, the latter two of the Lee Syndicate. Mr. Adler responded.

Eight new members were admitted to the association. They are: Preston F. Grandon, LaSalle (Ill.) Daily Post; A. C. Batdorff, Traverse City (Mich.) Record-Eagle; T. E. Nowels, Colorado Springs (Col.) Gazette and Telegraph; Harlan G. Palmer, Hollywood (Cal.) Daily Citizen; Earl R. Chapman, Kalamazoo (Mich.) Gazette; R. W. Monfort, Hartford City (Ind.) Times-Gazette; W. Laurence Dickey, Kansas City Journal-Post; Forrest Richmond, Toronto City (O.) Tribune.

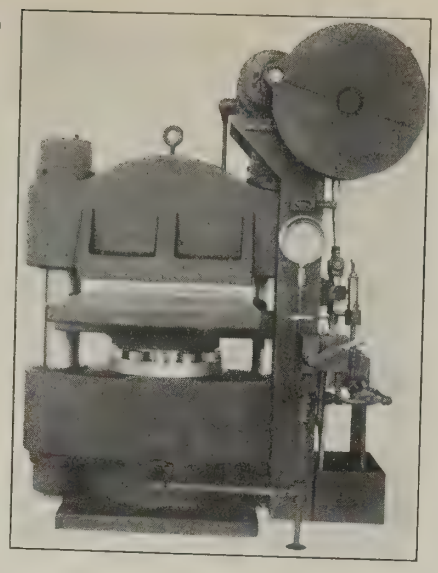
HYDRAULIC MAT PRESS IS PERFECTED

Four Metropolitan Newspapers Install Machine Made By American Birotadruck Co. in Elkhart, Ind.

A newly developed hydraulic press for molding newspaper matrices was announced this week by Samuel P. Weston, president of the American Birotadruck Company, New York, which, organized last May, has obtained the exclusive North American rights to sell and manufacture the machine and press process, a German-Austrian invention.

Announcement was withheld until this date, Mr. Weston informed EDITOR & PUBLISHER, in order to allow his company opportunity to improve upon the original invention and establish its manufacture in this country. The company is operating a factory in Elkhart, Ind., he said, and orders are now being received.

The machine employs direct pressure on either wet or dry mats rather than the roller method now in common use, Mr. Weston explained. One outstanding feature, he claimed, is that the pressure obtained is constant, with no distortion and no slip. In normal use, the machine will exert a pressure of a ton and a quarter per square inch over a type page.



"Since the pressure is direct", Mr. Weston asserted, "there is no possibility of breaking down the type. In other words, in molding a mat the machine makes an absolute die of the type or photo-engraving. This die is very deep and sharp cut, and, as a result, the life of a plate on the press, we estimate, is from 25 to 50 per cent longer than that from an ordinary stereotype plate."

Mr. Weston is of the opinion that the Birotadruck process shows particularly good results in making matrices of half-tones and of small type on tabular pages, such as market reports and classified.

"The time element for matrice-molding is slightly faster than the present method", he declared. "The cost of operation is no greater and probably less, since only a two-horsepower motor is used."

The manner in which the new machine was developed and brought to this country is described by the company as follows:

"Great development in daily newspaper half-tone printing has taken place in Europe. The most effective of these methods is the "Birotadruck" process developed by Max Thiele, a trained newspaper engineer, in charge of mechanical operation of the Hamburg Nichrichten. Thiele experimented for ten years to perfect a method of printing illustrations in the daily newspapers which meets the best time requirements of newspaper work and does not involve fundamental changes in present mechanical practices or modifications on the printing presses. Three years ago the process was perfected and is now being used in upward of 30 newspapers in Continental Europe. Engineers and representatives of the American Birotadruck Company were sent to Hamburg to report on the process and to witness trial demonstrations under actual working conditions. Contracts were closed giving the American Birotraduck Company exclusive rights for the sale and utilization of the process and for the manufacture and sale of the press in North America.

New hydraulic matrix press which eliminates roller

"A Thiele matrice press was shipped to New York and erected in the plant of the New York Herald Tribune, and Mr. Thiele, the inventor, was brought to New York by Mr. Weston to demonstrate his process and prove it under American newspaper working conditions and practices. After a demonstration covering several weeks the Thiele hydraulic mat press and Birotadruck process was purchased by the Herald Tribune.

Other instalations have been made by the New York Times, Boston Globe, and the Dallas News. Arrangements are now being made to set up the machine in the plant of the Cleveland Press and several other large offices.

Associated with Mr. Weston in the company are A. B. Caldwell, of the A. B. Caldwell Company, Chicago; A. D. Greenleaf, owner of the Elkhart (Ind.) Truth, and president of C. G. Conn, Ltd., makers of musical instruments; and W. H. Foster, of the Foster Machine Company.

BUILDING GOOD WILL FOR TRACTION COMPANY

either direction, one wonders at its volume.

"But on a single loop street at the same time and in the same direction, three times as many people go home by street car.

"The out-bound automobiles find 40 feet of boulevard too narrow. The street cars share with other vehicles a strip of street 9 feet wide.

"The fact that 80 per cent of ail riding in the city is on Surface Lines is due to this superior efficiency of street cars.

"Although they are the backbone of local transportation they are but 10 per cent of the vehicles in the streets. They interfere least with other traffic, are safest, most convenient and comfortable.

"And if street car passengers could have reasonably free use of the tracks they are required to lay, pave and maintain, efficiency and speed of operation could be increased.

"One street car gives more service than 35 automobiles."

Vast numbers every where must rely upon street cars for long distance hauls. What traction companies wish above everything else is that their public be made to realize the necessity of expediting movement along their tracks. Obvious, but seldom considered, is the sentiment in this advertisement of the Chicago Surface Lines:

"A balky automobile or a broken-down truck on a street car track often delays 50,000 people in reaching their destinations.

"Parking along the curb on narrow streets forces automobiles, trucks and horse-drawn vehicles to use the car tracks.

"The street car line—laid, paved and maintained by car riders—occupies but 9 feet of street space in each direction.

"Yet along this 9-foot strip on a single street, three times as many people ride as are carried in one direction by all the automobiles using a 40-foot strip of Michigan Boulevard.

"Three-fourths of all riding is on street cars.

"The boulevards, however, are free from parking and are preferred rights-of-way, while car line streets are cluttered with standing automobiles and are not favored in right-of-way regulations.

"Here is an opportunity for reform which will be of the greatest benefit to transportation and to the overwhelming majority of the people."

In conclusion, it is interesting to consider the Chicago Surface Lines' use of newspaper space as an advanced development of public utility advertising which is coming into increasing favor. Telephone companies have now for several years realized the advantages in informing their patrons of their difficulties and also of their accomplishments in the face of these difficulties. Railroads talk to passengers through advertising columns and are saved from uninformed criticism.

Now, one wonders, why throughout the country do not the traction lines realize from the steps taken by the Chicago pioneers?

NEWSPAPER SUPPORT OF THRIFT WEEK PRAISED

Speakers at Lewisohn Luncheon Emphasize Part Played by Press— To Raise $100,000 for Next Year's Work

Newspaper and magazine editors and publishers voiced their endorsement of National Thrift Week at the tenth anniversary thrift luncheon, held on Feb. 15 at the Bankers' Club, New York. The 30 or more persons who attended were the guests of Adolph Lewisohn, and chairman of the National Thrift Committee.

Among the newspaper men present were B. C. Forbes, publisher of Forbes' Magazine; H. A. O'Donnell, assistant business manager of the New York Times, representing Louis Wiley, business manager; and James W. Brown, publisher of EDITOR & PUBLISHER.

"I am glad of this opportunity to commend the educational campaign carried on by the Y. M. C. A. in behalf of thriftiness among young men and to commend Mr. Lewisohn's leadership in it," Mr. Wiley said in a letter read to the guests by Mr. O'Donnell. "There is probably no leader in any activity of American life who has not in youth practiced thrift and often careful economy.

"Thrift does not consist alone in the saving of money. There may be thriftiness in the expenditure of time, in obtaining an education. The dictionary defines thrift as 'care and wisdom in the management of one's resources.' This may also be defined as care and wisdom in the management of one's life. Good management of life and career makes a useful citizen and a citizen cannot be of the greatest use unless he is prosperous in a financial way, having an income sufficient to allow him to devote thought to the useful application of his leisure time without concern over the necessities of life.

"I wish you ever success in your campaign and am confident that good results will follow.

Visitors from Washington, D. C.; Trenton, N. J., and New Haven, Conn., in reviewing their local Thrift Week activities of this year, said that the newspapers in all cases had been cordial and had lent willing support to the movement.

Mr. Brown, commenting on this part played by the press, said he regarded it as indicative of good business sense as well as high idealism on the part of editors. Thrift Week, he said, offers an opportunity for editors, not only to champion a worthy cause, but also to establish closer working relationships with their business departments.

Other speakers were William E. Knox, president of the Bowery Savings Bank, and Dr. J. A. Stevenson, vice-president of the Equitable Life Assurance Society.

It was decided at the luncheon to undertake the raising of $100,000 for the tenth anniversary thrift program next season.

B. H. Fancher, president of the Fifth Avenue Bank, was appointed chairman of a temporary committee to create an enlarged organization.

One of the 1926 features was a national essay contest among high school children on "The Many Sided Franklin." The chairman of the Board of Judges for this contest is Dr. Talcott Williams, director emeritus of the Pulitzer School of Journalism at Columbia University. Among others serving with him on the board is John Clyde Oswald, publisher of The American Printer.

NEW CORRESPONDENT COURSE

"Home Training in News Writing" Offered by Newspaper Institute

Offering a new correspondence course in journalism, the Newspaper Institute of America has been founded and incorporated under the laws of the State of New York.

James McAlpin Pyle, of the law firm of Pratt & McAlpin, 120 Broadway, and a former associate editor of the Harvard Law Review, is president of the organization. The author of the course which is described as "a home training in practical newspaper writing" is Carrol Baker Dotson, a New York newspaper man. Roy Leighton Manker, formerly president of the Palmer Institute of Authorship, of Hollywood, Cal., up to this week sales and advertising manager, has resigned on account of ill health. Mr. Dotson is vice-president.

"We employ what we call the Copy Desk Method," explained Mr. Dotson. "Ours is not the conventional reading course. Along with his text studies, the student is required to learn to write by writing. His work will be treated exactly as it would be prepared for publication at any New York City copy desk. Principle and practice will go together.

"We base our training on New York newspaper practice because the thing toward which all newspapers strive is most graphically exemplified by the journalism of the metropolis."

Nine other New York newspaper men have contributed lecture material to accompany the author's texts, Mr. Dotson said.

The offices are at 25 West 45th Street.

Oregon Newspaper Directory Issued

There are 248 publications in Oregon, according to the Oregon Newspaper Directory, which has just been issued by the school of journalism of the University of Oregon. In the 1923 directory 253 publications were listed, consolidations having played a part in the decrease. There are 168 weeklies and 32 dailies in the state, and 140 towns have one or more publications. Seven new newspapers were started during 1925 and 11 were discontinued.

Don Gilman on Trip to Honolulu

Don E. Gilman, president of the Pacific Coast Advertising Clubs and honorary vice-president of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, will sail March 2, from San Francisco to visit Honolulu. He will carry with him a message from C. King Woodbridge, president of the A. A. C. W. to the Advertising Club of Honolulu. Mr. Gilman is also chairman of District 12 of the Associated Clubs.

HOW MRS. STILLMAN WAS ADVERTISED TO VICTORY

"I'll try," Anne replied simply. She left the room, went to her mother's desk, and in a few moments returned with the letter, which, blushing, she gave to the newspaper man to be spread all over page one of the American.

In the two-day serial story Winkler wrote as the result of this interview, some quotations are interesting to show how the case was employed by the American. Several paragraphs follow:

"You haven't any idea what I have been up against in the past year," and the beautiful young girl graduate smiled at her use of the slang phrase.

"It was awfully hard for me to get the truth—the right angle on things. Why even the newspapers, the real papers, were kept away from me. Only a stodgy morning paper and an equally dull afternoon paper were delivered at the school.

"Why it was only occasionally on weekends at railroad stations, etc., that I could buy a New York American and get a real idea of what was doing in the legal proceedings between my father and mother.

"I was astonished to read certain things about my father in 'live' newspapers like the American. I hadn't dreamed that my father could have so forgotten himself as to do the things attributed to him."

Winkler, speaking of what to him was the most interesting feature of the entire case said:

"The greatest fillup of all was the thrill I got out of being able to hand my old buddies on the American—Hank Stansbury, Charley Hand, Martin Dunn, and the rest—the reconciliation story, a yarn they could crow over."

(Next week this story of inside facts in sensational journalism will be concluded with Mr. Winkler's reminiscences of: the woman who named the murderer in the Dot King slaying; how the letters in the Hall-Mills double murder case in New Jersey were obtained; and how a chance tip led to the personally conducted elopment of Edith Gould and Carroll Wainwright.)

Celebrates 10th Year in Iowa Field

The tenth anniversary of the entrance of J. S. Farquhar, head of the string of Iowa publications owned by him, into Iowa journalism was observed Feb. 10 at a dinner in Cedar Rapids at which staffs of the Marengo Republican, Williamsburg Journal and DeWitt Observer, were guests. A native of Iowa, Mr. Farquhar was reared in Marengo and worked on the Chicago Herald-Examiner and Seattle Post-Intelligencer before buying the Marengo Republican in 1916.

By JAMES MELVIN LEE

HARPER LEECH, staff-writer on the Chicago-Tribune, and John C. Carroll, staff-member of the Medill School of Journalism, will soon publish through Pascal Covici of Chicago "What's the News?" If the book itself is an interesting as the advertising circular announcing its publication it is going to be one of the best sellers in the newspaper field.

These authors, according to the circular, were talking about newspapers and discussing how they had been written about—as the creation of master minds or the results of following certain codes and all that sort of thing. But to pick up the direct quote:

"Let's write a book," said one.

"We will," replied the other, "but about what?"

"The newspaper," the first retorted.

"Viewed from a naturalist's standpoint, as one would study a potato bug," replied the writer of interpretations of modern business.

"Exactly," retorted the copyreader, "its habitat, the laws of its life and growth, and death."

"As we have seen it for twenty years, the inside stuff, the food on which it lives, the air it breathes, the financial life that nourishes it in the American cities."

"That's it, and only about the American scene, for that is all that matters," the copyreader responded, "and if the public falls for this book, we will do another."

It is to be hoped that newspaper men will not scratch their heads too far out when they read:

"News" is accelerated literature. The newspaper is the shuttle, weaving the tapestry of history on the loom of time. In the fabric is woven your life, its joys, its sorrows, its triumphs and failures, its calm and its contentions. There are pictures there so like you, whoever you be, that in secret at least you know them for your portrait. The story of your fellows is there, the story of your city, of your state and of your nation.

The authors certainly took a whale of an assignment when they agreed to deliver the goods on this advance notice:

The authors of "What's the News?" lay this present day tapestry before you. As travelers through its hidden mazes for more than a score of years, they point out to you the hidden lines in the weaving. They take you back of the scenes and introduce you to the leading players. They place before you the politician, the crime problem, the labor union, the educational system, the business man, the sex problem, the professional reformer. They point out to you the hidden driving apparatus of the loom, take you into the power plant and walk through its many paths and by-ways. A book the like of which has never been put into print in the past; a book you as a player in the stage of life should read.

The follow-up story will appear in this department when "What's the News?" is published on March 15.

IN The New Republic for Feb. 3 a series of articles was started in which a reviewer of books puts his cards on the table face up for the benefit of the readers. The first installment has some interest for literary editors but has not very much meat for members of the working press.

TEACHERS of journalism will find an article worth clipping for the morgue in "Schools of Journalism" by Lawrence F. Abbott in The Outlook for Feb. 10. This article grew out of a letter that Mr. Abbott received from Professor Fred J. Lazell of the School of Journalism of the University of Iowa.

SPORTING editors may care to glance at "Constructive Treatment of Sport News" by Lawrence W. Murphy in The Scholastic Editor for January. This article contains suggestions on how to widen the appeal of athletic news.

FROM the view point of the newspaper office the most useful thing about "Employee Magazines in the United States": (National Industrial Conference Board, Inc.) is the fairly complete list of such periodicals published in the United States. This list may be found in the appendix.

The book is based upon a study of some 450 business organizations printing plant papers or house organs. The first chapter is a historical résumé. Other chapters take up such subjects as the function of the plant paper, the elements that make for successful publication, an analysis of magazines, personal experiences of editors, and suggestions for increasing effectiveness.

Those newspapers which have job plants and which print plant papers and are either directly or indirectly responsible for contents will find this volume well worth space on the shelves of its library. Doubtless these newspapers will confer a favor upon editors of plant papers if they bring it to the latter's attention.

DON C. SEITZ concluded his series of articles on the American press in The Outlook for Feb. 10. The immediate title of the concluding installment is "Self-Surrender." This article is one of the best of the series. In it Mr. Seitz points out that predigested food is bad for the teeth and that American newspapers need not so much schools of journalism as a course in Fletcherism.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Seitz ventures the guess that the Pulitzer School of Journalism with which he had so much to do in establishing turns out more "press parasites" than it does newspaper reporters. But he does not blame the publicity man so much for changed conditions as he does the editors who have so easily accepted his copy without question.

Mr. Seitz blames the Great War for many of the present disorders with which the newspaper press is afflicted. On this subject he says:

The papers were content to be fed by George Creel with silly stuff from a Government press agency. Their readers were kept as ignorant as the enemy was presumed to be, with great harm to newspaper repute and loss of public confidence in what was printed. This loss of confidence has not been restored.

In discussing press parasites he shows how sugar is hiding the pill:

Besides the debasing public results of being hand-fed, there is a consequent decadence of knowledge in the newspaper office. Writers do not have to be informed about SOCONY or Harry Emerson Fosdick. Everything about them comes in on a plate, so neatly done that it can be handled without chopsticks. It is a far cry from Tody Hamilton to Ivy Lee, but the bridge is now complete. The newspapers are sold, but do not get the price.

It is already argued by the press agent that he is a useful adjunct to the newspaper; that he saves it the trouble of much digging and many rebuffs. Heads of corporations are not easily accessible, and the press agent speaks for them, saving bother and expense. That is just the trouble. The newspaper gets what the corporations want it to get, and nothing more. The result is a corruption of the press, whether it thinks so or not.

In some of these articles by Mr. Seitz I have been under the impression that he had borrowed pen and ink from some one else, but in his concluding paper he is back at his old desk and has picked up a picric pen.

AT various times inquiries have reached me about a famous newspaper story written by O. Henry. A chance to get this story, "Calloway's Code," is afforded by the February issue of The Golden Book Magazine.

The story deals with a war correspondent who, hampered by the censorship of the War Department of Japan, sends the New York Enterprise from Wi-ju the following message:

Foregone preconcerted rash witching goes muffled rumor mine dark silent unfortunate richmond existing great hotly brute select mooted parlous beggars ye angel incontrovertible.

A reporter on the Enterprise interpreted the code correctly because of his knowledge of newspaper English. Not the word in the message but the one which usually follows it in the newspaper code is the one to be used to give the meaning:

Foregone—conclusion
Preconcerted—arrangement
Rash—act
Witching—hour of midnight.
Goes—without saying
Muffled—report
Rumor—hath it
Mine—host
Dark—horse
Silent—majority
Unfortunate—pedestrians
Richmond—in the field
Existing—Conditions
Great—White Way
Hotly—contested
Brute—force
Select—few
Mooted—question
Parlous—times
Beggars—description
Ye—correspondent
Angel—unawares
Incontrovertible—fact

From this code it was easy to compile the following story:

Concluded arrangement to act at hour of midnight without saying. Report hath it that a large body of cavalry and an overwhelming force of infantry will be thrown into the field. Conditions white. Way contested by only a small force. Question The Times description. Its correspondent is unaware of the facts.

At a time when all sorts of collections of short stories are being published it might be a good idea to have a volume containing short story masterpieces relating to the press.

EDITORIAL RESEARCH REPORTS supply accurate information upon the major problems which call for frequent editorial comment.

The reports are for the information and review of editors and publishers rather than for publication.

They are in use by the leading American newspapers and magazines.

The cost of this service, based upon circulation, is compatible with every moderately liberal editorial expense budget.

New Sitka, Alaska, Weekly

The Sitka (Alaska) Progress is the name of a new weekly newspaper recently launched. Clarence LeMaster is publisher. He was formerly with the Petersburg Herald.

Installing Large Engraving Plant

The Miami Herald is installing one of the largest photo-engraving plants operated by any newspaper in Florida, in its new five-story annex which is nearing completion. Fourteen photo-engravers will be employed. Wilbur W. Schaller, of Chicago, until recently in charge of the Standard Engraving Company plant at Dallas, Tex. will be in charge of the Herald's enlarged department.

Oregon Journal Buys Property

The Portland Oregon Journal is the reported purchaser of a block of property, 200 by 200 feet, near the main business district of Portland. It is said that the Journal intends to erect a large building for its own use on the property. The Journal has neither confirmed nor denied the reports, which have been printed in other Portland papers.

New Equipment for Moline Dispatch

The Moline (Ill.) Dispatch is now installing new plant equipment involving an expenditure of $70,000. A Scott straight unit sextuple press replaces a three-deck twenty-four page Scott. The all-new stereotyping equipment will include a Wood Pony Autoplate.

Rensselaer Independent to Build

The Rensselaer (N. Y.) Independent, tabloid weekly, has purchased a site and will erect a four-story modern plant and office building, Isadore Warshaw, managing editor, announced this week. The entire plant of the paper will be housed on the first floor; the second floor will be devoted to offices and the third and fourth floors to loft space for light manufacturing. New equipment will be installed by the newspaper. The Independent was established Nov. 7, 1924.

Murdered Editor's Plant Sold

The plant of the Kelso (Wash.) Cowlitz County News was recently sold at sheriff's sale. Thomas Dovery, Kelso editor who was murdered last June, was owner of the plant at the time he died.

Brokers

Broker—I have a client who has $100,000 to invest in a daily paper. I offer for sale a Texas weekly clearing $11,000 a year and it can be bought for down payment of $15,000. I can sell Illinois daily with building for $85,000. Editor draws a salary of $10 per day and is clearing over $20,000 a year. $30,000 down will handle the deal. I have listed for sale papers in 40 states. Buyers should tell me how much money they have to invest and describe what they want.

I am the only newspaper man on earth that I know of who specializes in consolidating newspapers in the same city. If you are not making money let the other fellow prosper. That is my slogan. I have been in the newspaper game for 37 years. I sold the weekly paper at Heavener, Okla., the weekly at Fordyce, Arkansas, and consolidated the two papers at Palmyra, Mo., this month.

I am Field Secretary of the Press Congress of the World and am doing my best to assist the editor of this newspaper who is Secretary and Treasurer and Dean Walter Williams, President of said Congress to line up one thousand newspaper men to go to Europe on September 4th to attend the Congress meet and take a wonderful tour of Europe. If you can make that journey brethren you should do so. Write Mr. Brown and he will tell you the whole story.

If you want to know anything about me wire any of the banks in Sturgeon, Mo., where I live. I am seriously thinking of opening an office in New York and San Francisco. My business grows each week.—Omar. D. Gray, Sturgeon, Missouri.

HERE'S a novel idea. Illustrated part of a section of an auto tire—sufficient to be recognized only by the tread. Offer a prize to persons being able to discern the makes of these tires. The contestants are to cut out the parts of these tires and past them in the spaces in which the respective dealers advertise.—GEORGE C. MARELEY.

The Age-Herald's Daily Reminder advertisements are attracting much atention in Birmingham. On the first of each month these full page ads are used. They are divided into sections one for each day of the month. In each section there is a special bargain or offering by some business house for that day. The whole is brought together with the advertisement of the Age-Herald at the bottom, "Age-Herald, Ready Reference Guide for Careful Purchasers."—S. N. S.

When interference threatened to ruin radio reception in Madison, Wis., the radio dealers banded together and were induced by the local newspapers to publish cooperatively a full page advertisement, calling for a radio mass meeting of the general public to dissect the troubles and decide what action to take to end the interference. Radio dealers in other cities might be similarly persuaded to advertise cooperatively when a common radio problem turns up for solution.—REUBEN LEVIN, Madison, Wis.

The Seattle Times is using a handy classified advertising blank for office use which indicates automatically the number of words in the ad and the number of lines. The blank is ruled both vertically and horizontally 10 lines across and 6 down—making 60 boxed spaces on the paper. The writer of the ad is told to write but one word in each space. As there are but six spaces across the paper, the same number accommodated on a linotype slug, the exact number of lines the ad will take is easily shown. The Times has adopted the rule that blind addresses count as three words.—C. M. L.

A reporter with a nose for news recently discovered that the hardest worked postal carrier in his town of 100,000 had the shortest route and that the easiest route was the longest. One carrier had a route of one block which comprised nine and 10-story buildings. He carried the greatest number of packages and the largest number of pounds of mail of all the carriers. The other fellow carried comparatively little, but had to travel miles. Each did a day's work, however, in entirely different ways. Pictures and interviews were easy to obtain and made interesting specials.—Fred E. Beane, Manchester (N. H.) Union-Leader.

The Knoxville (Tenn.) Journal has created a popular feature by allowing the staff of the Knoxville High School paper to edit one page each week. The students wrote their own stories of news items concerning the school. The copy was edited and heads written by the editor of the school paper, under the supervision of the city editor. The page was dressed up with cartoons of the amateur journalists drawn by Burtt, cartoonist of the Journal. Such a page not only produces a large amount of real news, but creates a vast amount of good will.—D. M. Owens, Knoxville (Tenn.) Journal.

The two or three big stores in your town are, whether you know it or not, clearing houses for seventy-five percent of the local news, six days a week and fifty weeks in the year. If each of these stores could be induced to operate a press department, i.e., a bright girl to write up at least, note down the flying items it would create an astonishing amount of live copy, some of it tips for more or less big stories. Suggest this to the managers, and when one of them says that he doesn't see wherein the store would benefit come back at him with something to this effect: "Good heavens, man! All you've got to do is whisper it around that the folks who trade at your store get their names in the paper when they go away or when they come back or have a party or entertain visitors from outside and you'll see where the benefit comes in." It isn't necessary to be partial in this matter. Put the proposition up to every store in town, little and big, if you want to. Of course news from advertising buyers gets the preference, and of course also if this personal mention stuff isn't what you want—well, your paper doesn't stand in need of the same tonic that most papers stand in need of.—D. H. T.

LOWENSTEIN RESIGNS

Schleppey Succeeds Him as Secretary of Chicago Publishers

CHICAGO, Feb. 18.—Bloor Schleppey, for the past five years associated with the public relations department of the New Orleans Electric Bond Company, is the newly appointed secretary of the Chicago Local of the American Newspaper Publishers Association. He fills the position left vacant by the resignation of M. Lowenstein, who has been secretary for the past three years.

Mr. Schleppey was born in Crawfordsville, Ind., and at an early age went into newspaper work. He served as a reporter on the Indianapolis News, was a Washington correspondent for the International News Service, and for a time was managing editor of the Milwaukee News. During the war he was in the marine service.

Mr. Lowenstein had no definite information to give regarding his plans for the future.

Dentists Advertising in Syracuse

Dentists of Syracuse have co-operated on an advertising campaign of 11,000 lines in the Syracuse Herald. Copy is unsigned and of a general nature, urging care of the teeth and stressing paying dental bills promptly. Copy is being written by George F. Bough of Herald advertising department. A recent doctor series was sold on the co-operative plan consisting of 16 half pages of copy.

HUNCHES

"TRAVELOGUES of An Editor at (name of town)" is a feature in the Madison (Wis.) Capital Times that knits the suburban readers closer to this newspaper and draws a good deal of circulation in the surrounding rural communities. Whenever the editor of this newspaper is a speaker at one of the small county towns, he writes a human interest story of his trip, describing the roads, the town, the changes in recent years, the school or hall at which he speaks, the modernity of the audience and the small town residents, the names of those taking part in the program, and publishes this under the boxed head mentioned in the first sentence.—Ruben Levin, Madison, Wis.

A good local feature for the motor page can be made about some resident of your city who has driven an automobile for ten or more years. Find the fellow who has operated a car from the time the automobile was a novelty. Learn his record in regard to accidents. Generally it is the fellow who has been driving the longest who has fewest accidents. Get his ideas on how to cut down traffic jangles and collisions. Old-time motorists have lots of good advice for making the roads safe.—A. C. Regli, Eau Claire, Wis.

Do you always place the dates when photographs were taken on the back of the pictures when they are placed in the files? This plan enables one to ascertain in the future whether the picture is sufficiently recent to be used without a new one being obtained.—B. A. T.

The Battle Creek (Mich.) Enquirer-News has been running for some months an interesting series of articles on what has become of members of the different graduating classes of the Battle Creek High School. The name and address and occupation of each member of the class under description has been given with great exactitude and has proved of great interest to readers.—R. E. Dietz.

Interview your librarian on so-called "naughty" books, the new books that are condemned from the pulpit. Do more men or women ask for them? What are the favorite excuses? Do they usually get them "for someone else?" Do pastors read them before condemning them? —John G. Baker, Milwaukee Journal.

SUCCESS AWAITS YOU IN NEW ENGLAND

WHERE THRIFT IS A HABIT

From the age old necessity of making provision for the winter came the habit of thrift.

This habit is characteristic of New Englanders and accounts, in large measure, for the fact that this section leads the nation in average savings bank deposits.

Seven per cent of the country's population live in these six states and in their savings banks are sixteen per cent of the country's deposits. Of the country's total number of depositors, fifteen per cent live in New England.

City life, as well as industrial conditions, make for larger savings. People living in cities are in a more rapid procession. They save to educate their children or to improve their homes so as to keep up with the others. There is more class distinction than in the country, and therefore more competition.

The American Bankers Association showed that on June 30, 1925, New England led the country with a per capita deposit of $473 in the savings banks.

This evidence of prosperity should induce the manufacturer who has not already entered this territory to take advantage of the services extended to National Advertisers by the New England daily newspapers. You can secure from them territorial data and information relative to merchandising and sales promotion that will simplify your problems. They will prove to you that every home in this responsive market can be reached by the daily newspapers at a cost that is lower than any other method of advertising.

These New England Newspapers Are Result Producers.

BROAD STREET,-- a "Main Street" that is 12½ miles long

Philadelphia has an area of 129,714 square miles and a population of 2,024,394.

Broad Street, Philadelphia's main North and South Street is 12½ miles long within the city limits. It gives you an idea of the vast area covered by this city of homes, where nearly everybody reads the Bulletin.

The reader confidence enjoyed by The Evening Bulletin is attested by the fact that The Bulletin's circulation is the largest in Philadelphia and one of the largest in the United States.

The Bulletin goes into practically every home in and around the great city of Philadelphia and makes it possible to reach this huge market of nearly three million people — third largest in America — through one newspaper at one cost.

With a circulation of over half a million copies daily. The Bulletin dominates Philadelphia.

A. B. C. Adopts New "Air Tight" Rule Regulating Combination Sale

Directors in New York Session Revise Resolution Passed at Annual Meeting and Vote New Measure Into Operation Effective Oct. 1, 1926—Recipients of "Clubbing" Newspapers Must Know They Are Buying Two Publications

AN important ruling regulating sale of newspapers in combination was unanimously adopted by the board of directors of the Audit Bureau of Circulations meeting in New York last week. Scheduled to become effective Oct. 1 this year, it changes completely the bureau's procedure regarding clubbing offers, and is described as making the resolution on the subject introduced by Harlan G. Palmer, Hollywood (Cal.) Citizen, at the last annual convention, "air tight, and therefore designed better to protect both advertiser and publisher."

As adopted the ruling reads:

"Where two or more daily or Sunday newspapers are distributed together, if the circulation of either is to be certified as paid, the price charged for the combination shall be, in the case of single copies of dailies, the highest advertised price of the highest priced paper in the group, plus not less than one cent for each of the additional papers.

"In the case of single copies of Sunday papers the price charged shall be the highest advertised price of the highest priced paper, plus not less than 20 per cent of the price of each of the other papers.

"For carrier subscriptions, the price charged shall be the highest advertised price of the highest priced paper for such subscriptions, either in the city of publication or outside of it, plus not less than 10 per cent of the advertised price of each of the other papers; for mail subscriptions, the price charged shall be the highest advertised price of the highest priced publication in the respective territories served, plus not less than 10 per cent of the advertised price of each of the other papers."

As explained to EDITOR & PUBLISHER, by Stanley Clague, managing director of the bureau, the ruling was adopted for the purpose of making certain that the recipient of papers sold in combination would know that he was buying two papers and not just one. Thus if one paper costing three cents was sold with a two-cent paper the price must be four cents in order to be rated as paid circulation by the A. B. C.

In the case of Sunday papers where one sells for ten cents and the other at five in combination they must be sold for 11 cents.

The third clause was included in order to provide for differences arising from zone subscription rates, Mr. Clague said.

The bureau's procedure in the past has been that two publications could be clubbed, sold, distributed and counted as paid circulation if at least 50 per cent of the price of both publications is collected. In other words if two daily newspapers were combined and sold together, if one was priced at three cents and the other was priced at two cents, if three cents was collected that would be more than 50 per cent of the combined price of both publications, and therefore would be valid as circulation under the rules of the bureau since it has been in existence.

The ruling changing this practice as adopted last week was drawn up after long study and consideration on the part of Mr. Clague, the bureau's newspaper advisory committee, and a special committee appointed by O. C. Harn, bureau president, at the November meeting of the directorate.

It was submitted to the February meeting by Mr. Clague with the recommendation that it be made effective as of April 1. The question of the date was argued with Guy Earl, of the Los Angeles Express, appearing before the board to ask for sufficient delay to allow him to adjust his business.

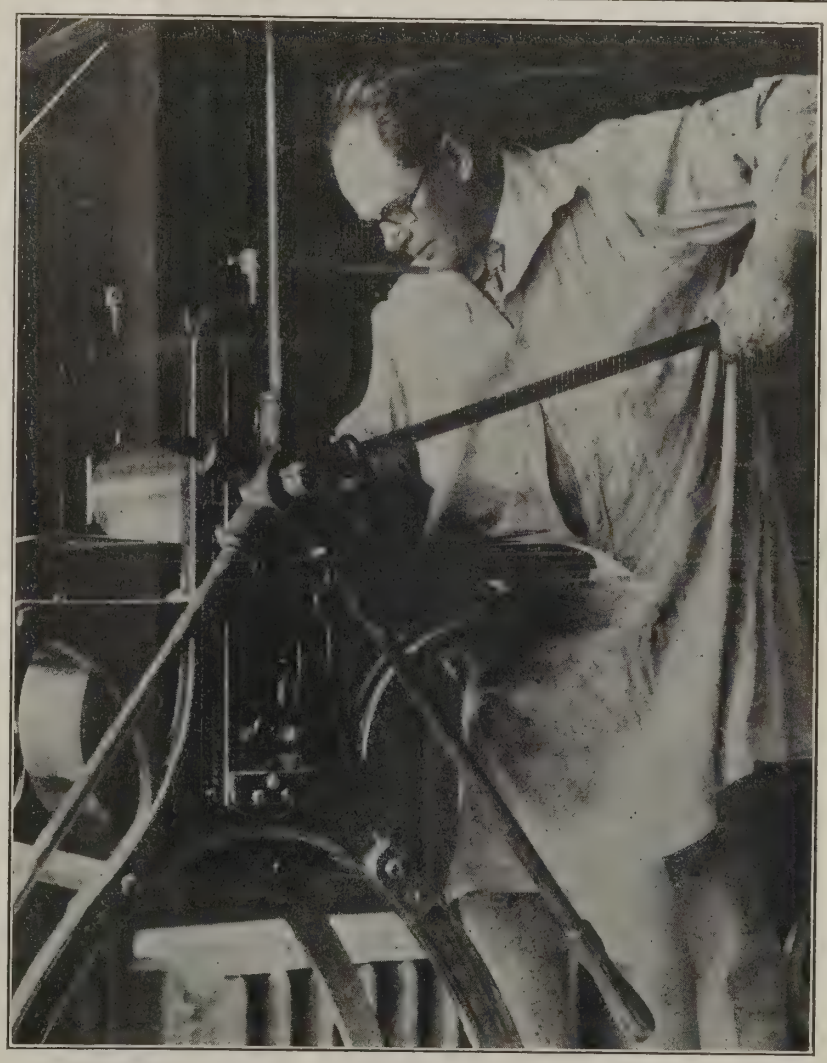
The move to change existing procedure on clubbing arrangements had first been set in motion by Mr. Palmer, representing the Dailies Division of the Southern California Editorial Association, and voicing objection to the fact that the Los Angeles Express, Mr. Earl's paper, was being sold in combination with the Alhambra Post-Advocate, Glendale Press, Pasadena Evening Post, San Pedro Daily News, Venice Evening Vanguard, Hollywood News, Redondo Daily Breeze, and Santa Monica Outlook.

Mr. Earl in his plea before the A. B. C. board's New York meeting declared he would require at least six months to put into operation the advanced subscription price which would be necessitated by the new ruling. Since the board agreed that valuable property rights were involved, it was moved and passed that the ruling should not become effective until Oct. 1.

Hugh O'Donnell, assistant business manager of the New York Times, represented the bureau's newspaper advisory committee, when the ruling was adopted by the board.

The board meeting at which the new ruling was adopted in New York was described to EDITOR & PUBLISHER as "one of the most enthusiastic in the association's history." The few absent were unavoidably detained, and those attending, the writer was told, gave the combination sale problem "closest consideration."

"Whether or not the new ruling solves the problem remains to be seen," Mr. Clague said after the board meeting in an exclusive interview with EDITOR & PUBLISHER. "It is the aim of the bureau to serve both the advertiser and the publisher, and we have kept this aim constantly in mind when debating this question. Now we believe we have reached a solution, but the solution will only be tested when the ruling is put into operation next October. Then we will be able to see if it will work out satisfactorily. The special committee appointed by Mr. Harn and the newspaper committee framed the ruling after exhaustive research. The members of the two committees are unanimous that the ruling is sane and sensible.



"Mr. Palmer had expressed the desire that the board's ruling be made retroactive to October, 1925, the date when his resolution had been passed by the membership. This was not considered fair to Mr. Earl. It was recommended therefore that the date be April 1. Mr. Earl had requested an opportunity to appear before the board in New York and his request was granted. He made it very clear to the board members that at least six months' delay was necessary, and the vote was unanimous changing the date to October, 1926.

"We are confident the action of the board on this matter will be appreciated by the membership despite the fact it changes and delays the resolution submitted to and passed by the members in convention."

Directors attending the New York meeting and voting on the clubbing rule were:

Mr. Harn, National Lead Company, and bureau president; F. R. Davis, General Electric Company, Schenectady, N. Y.; W. A. Strong, Chicago Daily News; E. R. Shaw, Power Plant Engineering, Chicago; B. H. Bramble, American Chicle Company, Long Island City, N. Y.; Mason Britton, McGraw-

Ashby, Western Clock Company, La Salle, Ill.; and W. K. Towers, Paige-Detroit Motor Car Company, Detroit, Mich.

The resolution as framed by Mr. Palmer and passed by the A. B. C. membership at the 1925 convention, now replaced by the new version passed by the directorate, read:

"Resolved, that where two daily or Sunday newspapers are distributed together, if the circulation of each is to be certified as paid, the price charged for the combination, shall be greater than the price at which either may be purchased separately."

At the November meeting of the board the matter was considered and it was then resolved that Mr. Harn appoint a special committee to consider the matter, confer with the newspaper committee and report to the January session.

The committee Mr. Harn appointed consisted of L. B. Jones, P. L. Thomson, Walter Hine, W. A. Strong, D. B. Plum, F. W. Stone, Marco Morrow, B. Kirk Rankin, Mason Britton and Mr. Clague, Mr. Harn was committee chairman.

Eastern members of this committee met in New York to discuss the subject Dec. 1, while western members met in Chicago Dec. 8 and 9. On Dec. 12, Mr. Clague submitted to members of the committee and to members of the newspaper committee a report covering the recommendations of both the eastern and western members.

E. Lansing Ray, publisher of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, is chairman of the newspaper committee, other members of which are: Mr. O'Donnell, New York Times; Gardner Cowles, Des Moines Register and Tribune; D. E. Town, of the Hearst general management; and T. R. Williams, of the Pittsburgh Gazette Times and the Pittsburgh Chronicle Telegraph.

Concerted agitation against clubbing first began in September, 1925, when the Southern California Editorial Association in annual convention appointed Mr. Palmer to represent its membership at the Bureau's Chicago meeting formally to request the A. B. C. to "make such changes in its rules, regulations, or practices" that would prevent certification as paid circulation copies of newspapers sold with other papers without additional charge.

Mr. Palmer then argued that the question did not concern Southern California exclusively. He said a poll had been taken among newspapers throughout the nation upon the matter. Of 270 replying, he said, 260 had declared they were opposed to the practice.

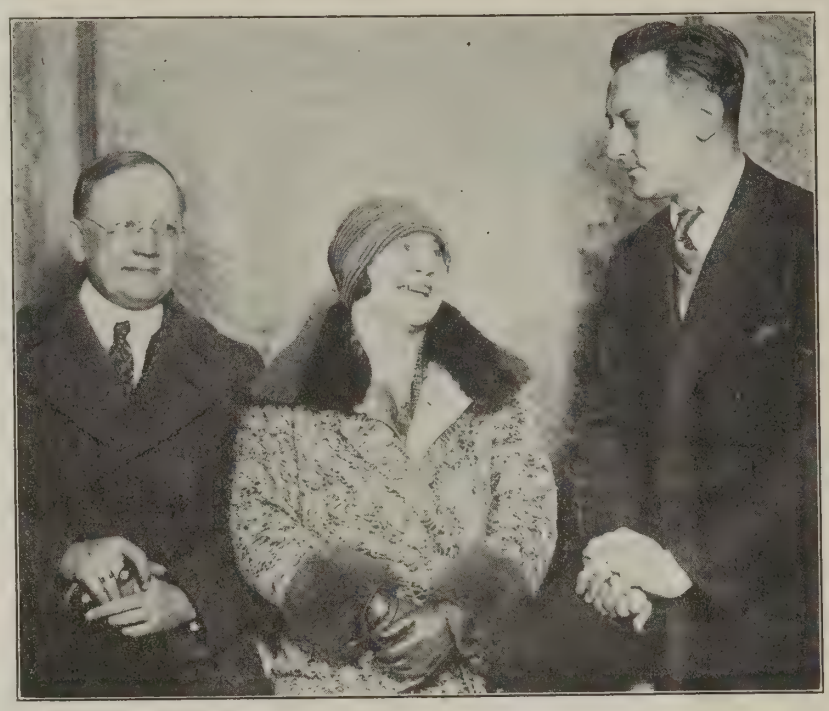
"Are we maintaining a standard which we are glad to point to as indicative of the high plane upon which our newspapers stand, when that standard permits one newspaper to be given free with another newspaper and yet the certification of that free paper is classed as paid circulation?" Mr. Palmer asked at that time.

"We make no objection to the clubbing of newspapers together. We ask only that a price be charged so that it may be determined from that price that the recipient of two papers is willing to pay something, little though it may be, but that he be willing to pay something for the second paper."

Mr. Palmer also called attention to the news story he had read in EDITOR & PUBLISHER telling of the purchase of the Elizabeth (N. J.) Times by Hearst interests to be sold in daily combination with the New York Evening Journal, and on Sunday with the New York American.

"So you see," he said, 'it is not a condition peculiar to the state of California. It has now reached the eastern coast, it is working from coast to coast. It is eventually going to come to the point where it will concern and effect each one of you."

F. W. Kellogg, publisher of the Los Angeles Express, who had sold his property to Mr. Earl, was also afforded a hearing at the A. B. C. Chicago convention. He made it clear that he was within his rights as far as existing A. B. C. rules were concerned, and expressed a willingness to abide always by the bureau's laws.



He explained why the Express had built up its combination sale arrangements, as follows:

"There are in Southern California, in Los Angeles County, outside of the City of Los Angeles, about 1,500,000 population. Los Angeles has about 1,000,000 population, and Los Angeles County has about 2,500,000 population. There are about twenty cities there. Outside of Los Angeles, there are very few important cities in the State of California. You can number them on one hand. One is San Diego; one is Fresno; one is Sacramento; one is Oakland; and one is San Francisco. Los Angeles County has more population than all the rest of the state put together.

"In the days when Los Angeles was young, the Los Angeles Express used to devote a great part of its paper to the news of these communities, but as they grew, it was impossible to cover all of these communities, and we have some cities in Los Angeles County that are very important. If you will group all of the cities outside of Chicago, and bring them in within a radius of twenty-five miles of Chicago, all of the cities in Illinois, excepting East St. Louis, you will have a situation very similar to what we have in Los Angeles.

"At the time I published the Pasadena Evening Post, the Star News in that city had a circulation of something over 10,000 copies, and the Los Angeles newspapers, ten miles away, had a circulation as follows: The greatest circulation was the Herald of 1800 papers a day. Then came the Los Angeles Times of 1600; then the Los Angeles Express of 1200; then the Los Angeles Examiner at that time of 900, and the Record had between 300 and 400, as against 10,000 daily newspapers of a paper printed in a city only ten miles from the center of the city. Why? Because no newspaper in Los Angeles could give them the news that the community demanded."

WEEKLIES AWARDED PRIZES

Five Papers Singled Out for Honors by Wisconsin Press

First honors in the 1925 Community Service contest held under the auspices of the Wisconsin Press Association were awarded to the Spring Valley Sun, for a single service, and to the Burlington Standard Democrat for several services. The announcement was made at the midwinter meeting of the association in Milwaukee recently.

The contest was judged by Professors Willard G. Bleyer and E. Marion Johnson, of the University of Wisconsin Course in Journalism, Prof. J. H. Kolb, University of Wisconsin agricultural sociologist, John R. Wolf, Milwaukee Journal, and Don E. Mowry, manager, Madison (Wis.) Association of Commerce.

Judges of the contest described the service of Editor Charles Lowater's Spring Valley Sun as the "Waking of a community consciousness and purpose." Editor Lewis H. Zimmermann's Burlington Standard Democrat gave effective support to seven different community projects.

Next to the Spring Valley Sun, Editor D. F. Burnham's Waupaca Post performed the best single service in its campaign for an area tubercular test for cattle. The plan for organizing a system for conducting county-wide tubercular tests was originated by Editor Burnham and has been adopted in other counties.

Next to the Burlington Standard Democrat, Editor Harry H. Heidemann's Algoma Record Herald performed the most worthy services. Thirteen separate services were performed effectively by the Algoma paper.

Honorable mention for performing a single service was given to the Waterloo Courier, published and edited by J. Lewis White and Exilda Hackett White, for their support of the firemen's park activities.

FOLDER USED TO STEM PRESS AGENT TIDE

Ad Manager Sent Hand-Outs to Firm Chiefs With Succinct Analysis of Why Publicity Is Wasted Effort

By A. D. Manager

In line with the suggestions made by EDITOR & PUBLISHER some time ago relative to sending back "publicity" to those at whose behest it is sent out, the writer prepared and used while he was advertising manager of a certain daily newspaper a small folder that may prove of interest to others who have to handle the daily grist of press agent stuff.

The folder and the publicity were sent to the concerns advertised—not to the press agents or the publicity department sending the stuff out. All of the material received that could be gotten into an ordinary envelope and mailed for two cents was returned. When only a printed or mimeographed "story" was received the whole offering was sent. When mats or cuts were included with the story, only the proofs were sent.

The folder consisted of an 8¼ x 1 sheet of cherry bond in the form of a six page folder, of double thickness. As folded for mailing, each of the two outside pages carried the legend, "Why we are sending your publicity home." The third page on what was the back of the sheet when opened to the text carried the name of the paper, its address and the names and addresses of the New York and Chicago representatives. The envelope used was a No. 6¾, of cherry bond to match the folder. The text, which covered the three inside pages, was as follows:

"Do you give away any of your products?

"Do you ask the butcher, the baker and the candlestick maker to give you what you need of their goods?

"You do not?

"Then why ask us to give you what you need of our product?

"We take it that you are in business to make money. If you gave away what you had to sell, your profits wouldn't amount to much. That is elementary.

"We are in the same boat.

"Part of our income is derived from selling newspapers; it won't meet the payroll. The rest of our receipts—our chief revenue—we get from the sale of advertising space.

"If we gave away that space we couldn't sell it. If we didn't sell it we couldn't stay in business.

"There is another angle from which this matter should be viewed. Our readers don't expect advertising in our news columns. If we are to retain their respect and confidence—which we must do—it behooves us to be fair with them.

"Lastly, consider this. All those concerned in the production of the reams of "publicity" sent us—the paper maker, the mat manufacturers, the engravers, the printers, the writers, the illustrators and the press agents—are paid well for their efforts. And all they do is prepare something that is useless unless it is published. It is for us to give or refuse it life. And we, of all those engaged in its creation, are expected to do our part without remuneration.

"Is it fair?"

Circumstances did not permit carrying on the experiment long enough to note any results. It may be, for that matter, that no results would be apparent, regardless of how long the experiment were continued. But it is believed that a concerted effort along similar lines were to be made by a considerable number of newspapers, it would bring about some abatement of the nuisance.

WHY O. C. HARN QUIT READING AUTO PAGES

A. B. C. President and National Lead Company Executive Denounces Free Publicity—Discusses Trend Towards Co-operative Advertising

By PHILIP SCHUYLER

Plumbers, ice men, underwear manufacturers, wall paper makers, paint mixers and other trades and industries are rapidly discovering the benefits of co-operative advertising.

O. C. Harn, advertising manager of the National Lead Company, tells of the press agent pitfall to avoid in group advertising and details the advantages of paid promotion for a common pocketbook in this, the fifth of a series of articles obtained by EDITOR & PUBLISHER, discussing the present advertising trend.

Mr. Harn speaks from personal experience as member of the National Save-the-Surface Campaign Committee.

O. C. HARN, advertising manager of the National Lead Company, and president of the Audit Bureau of Circulations, is a "bug" on automobiles. It is just one of his many interests. He drives his own car, has done so for years, and trades in old models to buy new ones frequently. Once upon a time it was his daily habit to read with interest and care the newspaper automobile pages.

"Do you know why I quit reading them?" he asked the writer this week, and then answered the question himself.

"Because they became uninteresting and dull examples of press agent art. The motor stories deteriorated into the usual salesmanager's idea of a good time. I was able unfailingly to detect free publicity.

"Now," he added, "I read only the automobile advertisements in the newspapers and magazines. I have lost confidence in the news columns of the automobile section. To me they have become simply wasted newsprint."
